THE EVOLUTION of LANGUAGE.

Written language began with pictures, the earliest examples of which are believed to be Egyptian, though all primitive nations employed them. But pictures were found to be useful for communicating general ideas only, it being impossible to describe things, or to convey specific information by mere symbols. The next step, therefore, in the evolution of written signs, was the invention of characters that represented words in their relationships to specific ideas; after came which a system of accents and phonetics, and characters in combination that permitted of their use to form any thought which the writer desired to communicate.

The evolution of written language, from the earliest form of the Egyptian hieroglyphic, to the Phœnician sound-characters, is admirably represented by the examples shown in the plates following, which are as interesting as they are instructive. It was from the Phœnician alphabet that the English letters were borrowed, improved, of course, through successive centuries, just as we find improvements, and changes ~~of style~~ within our own remembrance, and changes scarcely less marked no doubt will continue to be made throughout all the centuries to come. A succinct history of the inscriptions printed on ~~on~~ each of the plates here shown is appended, together with their decipherments as rendered by the greatest scholars of the age.

These examples are most pronounced successive steps in the development of written language by ancient nations: Egyptian, Assyrian, Hittite (Arabian), Phœnician.

HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

ORIGIN OF THE LANGUAGE.

The English language is the speech spoken by the Anglo-Saxon race in England, the larger parts of Scotland and Ireland, the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and in many other parts of the world. It is the language of perhaps one hundred and thirty million people, and the number is rapidly growing.

Original British Language.—The original language of Great Britain, Ireland and parts of France belonged to the Celtic group, and it is still spoken in Wales, Brittany (France), the Scottish Highlands, and Western Ireland. This Celtic speech has, in the course of time, contributed some of its words to the English language.

Family of English Speech.—English speech, as we now know it, belongs to that great family of languages which was spoken by the Aryan race, or races. This race originally inhabited the high table lands of Asia lying north of the western range of the Himalaya Mountains. Thence it spread to the South and West, peopling many countries, and becoming the source of the languages now spoken in India, Persia, Greece, Italy, France, Spain, Germany, Scandinavia, Russia, as well as of the English language. All these languages, because of certain root and other philological similarities to that of the Aryan tongue, are said to belong to the Aryan family of languages; or, as it is oftener called, to the Indo-European family of languages.

Group of English Speech.—The Indo-European, or Aryan, family of languages consists of several groups or divisions. One of these groups is named the Teutonic group because it is spoken by the Teutonic or German race or races, found in central Europe (Germany), Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Iceland, England, Scotland, etc. It was in the year 449 that a little branch of this Teutonic group, consisting of a rough, guttural speech of some two thousand words, crossed over from the northwest corner of the continent of Europe to the British Isle, being carried by the Jutes, Angles and Saxons, who came to both aid and conquer the Britons or Celts, as well as to confer on them a new speech—the Anglo-Saxon.

Branches of Teutonic.—The Teutonic Group of languages is divided into three branches, viz, German or High German, spoken in Germany proper and part of Austria; Dutch or Low German, spoken in Holland and generally in the low countries about the mouths of the rivers that empty into the Baltic and North Sea; Scandinavian, spoken in Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Iceland.

Dutch or Low German Branch.—The English tongue sprang out of and belongs to the second of the above branches—the Dutch or Low German branch. It was a mere dialect—and a crude one at that—of this branch, when it crossed the German Ocean, invaded Britain, and imparted its name, Angla-land, England, to the island.

Birth of English.—The Jutes came over to Britain from Juteland (Jutland) and settled in the Isle of Wight and Kent. The Saxons came over and settled in Southern and Western Britain, in four little kingdoms, which are now so many counties bearing their ancient names, viz., Wessex, or West Saxons; Essex, or East Saxons; Middlesex or Middle Saxons; Sussex or Southern Saxons.

The Angles came over and settled mostly on the east coast, calling their kingdom East Anglia, and dividing it into North Folk (Norfolk) and South Folk (Suffolk). Each of these three tribes or sets of Teutons brought its own Low German dialect along, and each dialect differed in many respects from the others; but, notwithstanding this, each found a congenial soil and took root, to grow and be blended in the course of a few hundred years into the vigorous and beautiful English speech.

Periods of English.—Students of the English language divide its growth into periods. We prefer the division made by Mr. J. M. D. Meiklejohn, Professor of the Theory, History and Practice of Education in the University of St. Andrews, Scotland, in his excellent work entitled "The English Language: Its Grammar, History and Literature." He divides and treats the periods, in substance, as follows:

I. Ancient English or Anglo-Saxon, 449-1100.
II. Early English, 1100-1250.
III. Middle English, 1250-1485.
IV. Tudor English, 1485-1603.
V. Modern English, 1603-present time.

As the changes in language are as gradual and imperceptible as the growth of a tree, so the above periods shade off into each other in a slow and gentle way.

Ancient English or Anglo-Saxon.—This form of English speech (450-1100) differed almost entirely from modern English, in that it was a highly inflexional speech, having five cases for nouns, and several declensions; three genders; dual and plural numbers; a much larger number of inflexions for verbs; very few foreign words; and an alliterative poetry without end-rhyme. Cædmon and King Alfred were writers who belonged to this Anglo-Saxon period.

Early English.—This period (1100-1250) was characterized by the Norman-French invasion of England (1066), which introduced a new people, language and institutions. The Anglo-Saxon language ceased to be written in books, and Norman-French became the language of law, the court and polite society. But the Anglo-Saxons and those of their lineage continued to speak their own language, introducing into it, of course, many Norman words, and gradually dropping the inflexions as of less and less use. Two books, written but not printed, belong to this period, one called the "Ormulum," by Orm; the other, the "Brut," or "Story of Brutus," by a monk named Laweman.

Middle English.—During this period (1250-1485) nouns, adjectives and verbs lost nearly all their inflexions, and the newly introduced verbs assumed the weak, or regular conjugation. Even the common people tried to speak Norman-French, and the drift was in the direction of accepting that speech as the popular one. But this was checked by an Act of Parliament (1362) permitting English to be used instead of Norman-French. Moreover, poets arose, such as Chaucer, who wrote in the English of the time; and toward the end of the period appeared John Wyclif's translation of the Bible in the popular tongue.

Tudor English.—During this period (1485-1603) the inflexional endings disappeared entirely. Wenten became went, and hopen became hope. Under the Tudor kings a new and wide interest was taken in the study of foreign languages—Greek, Latin, Italian, etc.—and the English was enriched by the introduction of many foreign words, especially from Latin sources. This "Revival of Letters," as it is called in history, encouraged to copious speaking and writing of an English of great strength and comparative purity, and we find among the great authors of the time such poets as Spencer and Shakespeare, and such prose writers as Bacon and Hooker.

Modern English.—During this period (1603-present time) the grammar of the English language has undergone but little change, but there has been a continual enrichment of the vocabulary by the inflow of new words, either invented or adopted, for the purpose of expressing new ideas, and to meet the wants of a people rapidly expanding its thoughts and energies throughout the entire world. During this period the English language crossed the Atlantic Ocean westward, to become the speech, already, of over 80,000,000 people. It has become the language of the South Pacific continent, of Cape Colony in Africa, and of official India. Its strength and beauty for prose and poetry, art and science, industry and commerce, society and the emotions, are universally recognized.

THE FOREIGN ELEMENTS IN ENGLISH.

The Celtic Element.—As has been seen, when the Saxons, Angles, and Jutes came over to Britain in the fifth century, bringing along their Teutonic or Anglo-Saxon speech, and overcoming and ousting the native Britons or Celts, or mingling with them as their superiors, the Celtic, or native British, language also yielded ground, but not without contributing many of its words to the spare and rough vocabulary of the Anglo-Saxons. From the character of some of these words it would seem as if the Teuton adventurers or conquerors must have found wives or domestics among the native Celts, for of such contributed words we find many denoting the home or domestic estate, such as breeches, clout, crock, cradle, darn, mop, pillow, mattock, etc. Again, the Anglo-Saxon speech accepted as part of itself most of the Celtic names for the rivers, mountains, lakes and hills of Britain.

Thus much for the direct and at-home contribution of the Celtic to the Anglo-Saxon speech. But the Scotch, also Celtic, has also, at one time or another, made frequent contributions to the English speech, in the shape of clan, kilt, plaid, slogan, etc.; and Celtic Ireland has contributed shamrock, gag, log, brogue, etc.

The Celtic language made perhaps a still larger contribution to the English at a later period, and indirectly through the Normans who conquered England in 1066. These Normans, or Northmen, were originally Scandinavians—principally Danes—who, in the tenth century roved piratically southward and wrested that Celtic section of France which they called Normandy from the French king. Here they settled permanently, mingling with and absorbing the native Celts and resident Gauls and French, breeding a new, mixed and modified language called Norman-French. Of course this language was largely impregnated with Celtic words, and these words the Normans carried with them to England at the time of the invasion in 1066. There they readily became a part of the speech of the common people, or English. Among them are such words as bag, barter, barrel, basin, basket, bucket, bonnet, button, cart, dagger, gown, mitten, vassal, wicket, etc.

The Scandinavian Element.—The same sea-roving and free-booting Scandinavians, called Northmen, Norsemen or Normans, but generally Danes, who, as we have just seen, invaded Normandy, in France, in the tenth century and afterwards England, in 1066, had long previously, in the year 787, swept down upon the coasts of Britain, and obtained a permanent foothold, so permanent indeed as that, from 1016 to 1042, Danish kings sat on the English throne. These Danes being Teutons, brought along a German dialect akin to that of the Anglo-Saxons, or the then existing English, and, of course, the latter readily and easily borrowed from the former. Thus, the Danish element enriched English by such words as cake, call, crop, curl, cut, dairy, din, droop, flit, hustings, ill, kindle, plow, root, scold, sky, etc. The word "are" was not in the English until the coming of the Danes, and they introduced "to" as the sign of the infinitive mood.

The Latin Element.—The Romans (Latins) held Britain from A. D. 43 to A. D. 410, chiefly through garrisons. Their contact was with the original Britons (Celts), and consequently the Roman or Latin language of that era could not bear directly on the subsequent Anglo-Saxon or English speech. Yet six important words of Latin origin, and due to that period, are found in English. These words are castra, a camp, as in Land-castra (Lancaster), Man-castra (Manchester); strata, a paved road, our street; colonia, a settlement, our colony; fossa, a trench, as in Fossway, Fossbrooke; portus, a harbor, our port; vallum, a rampart, our wall and bailiff.

Christian Latin.—But there came a time when the English language was to be more fully and directly enriched by the Latin. In 596, Pope Gregory, in his zeal for the conversion of the Britons, sent to the island the celebrated missionary, Augustine, and forty monks. They met with great success, and, as a matter of course, the English speech as it then existed readily absorbed numerous Latin words connected with the church services, government, and formalities. These words were received in the crude form of the speech of the time, but have been gradually refined into apostle, bishop, cup, clerk, monk, presbyter, preach, alms, rule, etc. Not only this, but Christianity introduced the English people to the outside world, engaged them in travel and commerce, making necessary new words for communication and providing opportunity for their introduction. While not all were Latin words, they came mostly through Latin sources, or the commercial sources of the time. Among them may be instanced butter, cheese, fig, pear, peach, lettuce, pepper, camel, lion, elephant, oyster, pound, ounce, candle, table, marble, mint, etc.

Norman-French.—We have already mentioned the Norman invasion of England in 1066. They brought along their language, the Norman-French, classed as a Latin tongue. This language became the language of law, religion, court, college, nobility and books. It may have been a battle between Norman-French and crude English at first, but when the Normans lost their own country (Normandy) in 1204, those in England began to accommodate themselves to the English speech, and the English began to affect more and more the Norman speech and ways. Thus a happy and rapid blending of the two languages went on for a period of considerably over two hundred years with the result that when the poet Chaucer produced his Canterbury Tales in poetry and in the English of the time (1384-98), they could be read by both Norman baron and Saxon yeoman. The Normans were used to war. Therefore we may guess that many words which came into English from the Norman-French would savor of war. So, we find arms, armor, assault, battle, captain, chivalry, lance, standard, trumpet, mail, visor, etc. Again, the Norman nobility became the barons of the king, under the operation of the feudal system which they introduced into England. Therefore, as was to be expected, they contributed many words to the English speech relating to feudalism. Among such words are homage, fealty, esquire, vassal, herald, escutcheon, etc. Further, the Normans were fond of hunting; hence such words relating to the chase, as chase, brace, course, covert, copse, forest, quarry, venison, etc. They introduced into England their own system of laws and courts and, therefore, into the English speech such legal words as assize, attorney, court, judge, justice, plaintiff, sue, summons, trespass, etc. We must also add to these a long series of abstract terms of Norman-French origin, such as realm, state, constitution, people, treaty, army, navy, etc. While all these contributions were being made and accepted, the English language was firmly retaining, in modified forms, its original words relating to agriculture, as plow, harrow, flail, etc.; those relating to seafaring, as ship, boat, hull, fleet, oar, sail, etc.; those appertaining to the human body, as eye, nose, cheek, tongue, hand, foot, etc.; those denoting specific actions, as leap, spring, slip, slide, walk, fall, run, swim, ride, creep, crawl, fly, etc.

Synonyms.—This blending of languages, this gradual making of one speech out of two, gave rise to a striking phenomenon. When a Norman tried to use an English word he would compare it with, or associate it with, or put it along side of, the same word in his own language. When the Englishman tried to use a Norman word, he would associate it with the English equivalent. This gave rise to a bilingual, or double-worded, condition of the language, as seen in its synonyms—for instance, will and testament, act and deed, aid and abet, acknowledge and confess, meet and assemble, cloak and dissemble, humble and lowly.

The Revival of Learning.—The greatest enrichment of the English speech from classical Latin sources, and we may say from Greek sources as well, took place soon after the capture of Constantinople (1453) by the Turks. This event caused an exodus of learned men to all parts of Europe. They became teachers of Greek and Latin in Italy, Germany, France, England and elsewhere. With them came a host of Latin and Greek words—especially the former—which were forced into English with very little change of form, among them being opinion, faction, oration, pungent, etc. They came in such numbers as to lead to a pompous and affected speech, and to the comment by Sir Thomas Browne (1605-82), "that if English pens maintain that stream (of words) we have of late observed flow from many, we shall, within a few years, be fain to learn Latin to understand English." But at length the language became so saturated with these new and purely Latin words that a revolt came, and the best writers returned to a less ostentatious and affected English.

Spanish Element.—After the discovery of America (1492) and the consequent impetus given to ocean commerce, the English and Spanish peoples and languages came into closer contact, and the former speech was enriched by many contributions from the latter; the English language, as has been observed, being ever on the alert to increase its vocabulary by what it finds good and needful in other languages. Among the Spanish words thus absorbed by English—some of them with very little change of form—are armada, alligator, barricade, buffalo, cargo, cigar, cork, creole, eldorado, fillibuster, indigo, merino, mosquito, mulatto, negro, tornado, vanilla, etc.

Italian Element.—The Italian language has for many centuries been a liberal and useful contributor to the English, especially along the lines of literature and art. Thus, we have borrowed from the Italian the poetical terms, canto, sonnet, stanza; the musical terms, piano, opera, oratorio, soprano, alto; the architectural terms, portico, cupola, piazza; and many others of general tenor, as bandit, burlesque, cascade, charlatan, ditto, folio, gondola, grotto, influenza, malaria, pantaloon, ruffian, umbrella, volcano, etc.

Dutch Element.—The Dutch and English languages being akin—both Teutonic—and England and the Netherlands being close together geographically and commercially, it would seem as if words from the Dutch should abound in English. But this is not the case. Yet some very expressive words of Dutch origin are found, relating mostly to seafaring. Among these may be mentioned, ballast, boom, boor, luff, reef, skates, skipper, sloop, smuggle, yacht, yawl, etc.

French Element.—We have already seen how largely the Norman-French element has blended with the English language. But English has drawn directly on the French language, from time to time, for a great number of expressive words, which it has assimilated with very little change of form or pronunciation. They relate for the most part to manners and customs and to inventions and discoveries. Among them may be mentioned such words as aide-de-camp, belle, bivouac, blonde, bouquet, carte-de-visite, coup d'etat, debris, depot, etiquette, gout, outre, personnel, program, protege, trousseau, etc.

German Element.—English, being a Teutonic language of the Low-German order, has had very little need to enrich itself from a kindred speech—the High-German. Yet there have been, especially in later years, right frequent borrowings of such words as cobalt, feldspar, hornblende, loafer, meerschaum, nickel, plunder, poodle, quartz, zinc, etc.

Hebrew Element.—It could hardly be otherwise than that, through the agency of the Bible, the Hebrew should be a liberal contributor to the English speech, and from Hebrew sources we find such words as amen, behemoth, cabal, cherub, hallelujah, hosanna, Jehovah, jubilee, manna, rabbi, Pharisee, Sabbath, Satan, seraph, shibboleth, etc.

African Element.—Commercial relations with remote countries have caused an importation of words into English, generally of a kind expressive of the thing dealt in or imported. Thus, from African sources, we have derived, among others, the words canary, chimpanzee, gnu, gorilla, guinea, oasis, zebra, etc.

American Element.—From various native American sources have come into English words expressive of the new things seen and dealt with in commerce, and expressive of relations novel to the old world sojourners. Among these may be mentioned alpaca, buccaneer, cannibal, canoe, chocolate, condor, guano, jalap, mahogany, maize, moccasin, mustang, opossum, potato, raccoon, skunk, squaw, tobacco, tomahawk, tomato, wigwam, etc. This list may be enlarged indefinitely when it is remembered that the usage of the English language in the United States and Canada has been to adopt bodily from the native American, or Indian, speech the names of rivers, mountains, tribes, villages, etc., thus forever preserving the words and ideas of a perishing people.

Arabic Element.—The Arabic language has been a liberal contributor to the English. This may seem strange at first, but not when we consider that the Arabs were once advanced mathematicians and scientists, and their country a rich producer of the gums, spices and other articles which gratified English taste and enlarged commerce. Among the Arabic words found in English are alcohol, algebra, alkali, artichoke, assassin, caliph, carat, cipher, coffee, cotton, elixir, fakir, gazelle, giraffe, harem, magazine, mohair, nabob, naphtha, shrub, sofa, sultan, syrup, talisman, tariff, zenith, zero, etc.

Other Foreign Elements.—Indeed, it may be said that hardly a nation exists which has not, through the agency of commerce, contributed something of its speech toward the enrichment of the English tongue. Thus, the Chinese have given us the words silk, tea, typhoon, nankeen, junk, joss, hyson, bohea, etc. From the Hindu language come Brahmin, calico, chintz, jungle, loot, musk, pagoda, pundit, rupee, sugar, thug, toddy, etc. The Hungarian language has given us hussar, sabre, etc.; the Malay, bamboo, bantam, caddy, gong, gutta-percha, rattan, sago, upas, etc.; the Persian, awning, bazaar, caravan, check, chess, divan, jar, jackal, lemon, lilac, orange, sash, shawl, turban, etc.; the Portuguese, albatross, cobra, cocoanut, commodore, lasso, marmalade, molasses, etc.; the Russian, czar, knout, rouble, steppe, etc.; the Turkish, bey, dey, kiosk, ottoman, tulip, etc.

New Word-Making.—The Anglo-Saxon, or very early English, was a resourceful language in itself, that is, it had, like Greek and German, the power to meet new ideas and give them expression by means of combinations of its own words. Where a language has a large and rich vocabulary this method of enlarging it is very satisfactory, but where the vocabulary is scanty it becomes less satisfactory, yet the result is never without an element of strength and cleverness, whatever may be said of its smoothness and beauty. Thus, just as the Greek said camelopard, for that long-necked and spotted animal which resembled both camel and leopard; and just as the German says hand-shoe for glove, and finger-hat for thimble; so the Anglo-Saxon, or early Englishman, said pinch-penny for miser, mumble-news for tattler, fore-elders for ancestors, fore-wit for caution, inwit for conscience, folk-wain for carriage. Some early writers contended that this method of word-making should never have been departed from. But the incoming of the Norman-French settled its fate by offering its single words for those homely double ones. Later writers have advised a return to the old-fashioned method, but such consider very lightly, or not at all, the extreme paucity of the early English vocabulary, and forget the immense and rapidly growing need for new words expressive of ideas and embodying forms and meanings of a commercial, scientific and industrial kind. Such words are, for the most part, far beyond the power and resource of a primitive language, however combined; for no primitive language ever rises above its people, and the Anglo-Saxons were a people of simple wants and notions. So, therefore, it is that the English language, when it has need of a new word, finds it most convenient to resort to other sources than its own primitive ones for what it wants. It has enriched itself during the past active century by hundreds of coinages for the purpose of introducing new discoveries and rendering them useful in daily life. Among these we find telegraph, telegram, photograph, telephone, photophone, dynamite, cinemetograph, automobile, bicycle, etc., and so it will continue to do as long and fast as new things require new names, and new ideas new expression.

Doublets.—In introducing words from Latin into English speech, two doors or means of entrance seem to have been used—an eye and ear door, so to speak, or in other words, book Latin and second-handed Latin, or that through the Norman French, or some allied language. Thus, the pure Latin word antecessorum has taken the eye form of antecessor and the ear form of ancestor; so, conceptionem becomes conception and conceit; exemplum becomes example and sample; factum becomes fact and feat; fragilem becomes fragile and frail. The same fact follows the introduction of words into English from the Greek; thus, adamanta becomes diamond and adamant; phantasia becomes fancy and phantasy.

THE BUILDING OF ENGLISH WORDS.

In extending credit to the various authorities consulted in the elaboration of the subject of word building and derivation, much is especially due to that excellent work entitled "The English Language," by Prof. J. M. D. Meiklejohn, of the University of St. Andrews, Scotland.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF WORD BUILDING.

1. As with a tree, a word has a root, a prime source of vitality. The root of a word is the shortest form in which it appears, and is its primary element. Tal, meaning number, speech, is the root of tale, a number counted; tale, a story; tell, narrate; toll, something counted out; talk, discourse. All these words retain something of the significance and form of their root, tal.

2. When the root of a word undergoes modification, it then becomes a stem. If the root lov be modified by adding an e to make the word love, then love is the stem of lov. It is to the stem that all the inflections which a word may undergo are added. Thus it is to love that the d is added to make the past tense, loved.

3. When the root of a word is enlarged, or added to, by uniting a prefix or a suffix with it, the word so formed is called a derivative. Thus by prefixing en to the root dar=dear, we get endear; and by suffixing ling to the same root we get darling.
to the same root we get darling.

4. As a rule English prefixes and suffixes are added only to English roots. But there are many exceptions to this rule, as, for instance cottage is formed by suffixing the Latin age to the English root cot; and, again, covetousness is formed by suffixing the English ness to the Latin word covetous. Such words are called hybrids.

5. A compound word is one made by uniting two words together, as hoecake.

WORD-MAKING BY COMPOUNDING.

Compound Nouns.—Compound nouns are formed in various ways:—

(a) By uniting a noun with a noun; as bridal=bride-ale; daisy=day's eye; Gospel=God's spell or story; lapwing=leap wing; tadpole=toad head.

(b) Noun with adjective; as redbird, midnight, quicksilver, twilight=two lights.

(c) Noun with verb; as bakehouse, godsend, grindstone, spendthrift, washtub.

(d) Noun with adverb; as offshoot.

(e) Noun with preposition; as afterthought, by-word.

(f) Verb with adverb; as drawback, farewell, income, welcome.

Compound Adjectives.—There are many compound adjectives in the English language, and they are formed in a variety of ways. Thus:—

(a) Noun with adjective; as purse-proud, sea-green, lily-white, sky-blue.

(b) Noun with participle; as heart-rending, sea-faring, worm-eaten, way-laid, sea-girt.

(c) Adverb with participle; as everlasting, far-reaching, well-bred, high-strung, ill-pleased.

(d) Noun with noun; as bare-foot, lion-heart, iron-side.

(e) A favorite way of making compound adjectives is by uniting nouns, adjectives or adverbs with nouns to which ed has beed added; as club-footed, grey-headed, tender-hearted, down-hearted, under-handed.

Compound Verbs.—The few compound verbs in the English language are formed after this manner:—

(a) Verb with noun; as backbite, browbeat, henpeck, hoodwink, kiln-dry.

(b) Verb with adjective; as dumfound, fulfil, whitewash.

(c) Verb with adverb; as don=do on, outdo, unlatch.

Compound Adverbs.—These are made by uniting:—

(a) Noun with noun; as endways, side-ways.

(b) Noun with adjective; as always, breast-high, meanwhile, sometimes.

(c) Preposition with noun; as overboard, outside.

(d) Adverb with preposition; as hereafter, therein, whereupon.

WORD-BUILDING BY THE USE OF PREFIXES.

A ready and favorite way of building words is by the use of prefixes; that is, by the use of one or more letters or syllables combined or united with the beginning of a root or word to modify its signification. Generally speaking the prefixes used in our language are of English, French, Latin or Greek origin. When French is mentioned in this connection, it must be understood that Latin is really meant, for French is but a modified form of Latin.

English Prefixes.—These are of two kinds. One kind are called inseparable, because they have no meaning in themselves, cannot stand alone, and are of no appreciable use except in connection with words before which they are placed. Indeed, it may be said that quite often the effect they produce by their union with other words is more fanciful than otherwise. Yet there they are for better or for worse, and they must be reckoned with as an ancient and now essential feature of English speech.

A second kind or class of English prefixes are called separable. These have definite meanings in themselves, can stand alone, and may be used as independent words.

It is not the purpose here to furnish complete lists and significations of all the prefixes used in the building of English words, but only those of most frequent and important use, those which affect most appreciably the words to which they are attached; those which provide the best examples of this method of extending and reinforcing our speech.

English Inseparable Prefixes. The most important of these are:—

1. A, which conveys the meaning of on, it being a short form of the old English an. Examples would be abed=on the bed; aboard=on board; away=on the way; athwart=on the cross route.

2. Be is an antique form of by, and serves:—

(a) In connection with transitive verbs to intensify their force and meaning; as bedaub=daub thoroughly or all over, bedeck=to ornament, besmirch=to smear thoroughly.

(b) To turn an intransitive into a transitive verb; as intr. moan to tr. bemoan; intr. speak to tr. bespeak; intr. wail to tr. bewail.

(c) To turn nouns and adjectives into verbs; as befriend, benumb, besiege.

(d) To unite with nouns to make new nouns of varied or stronger meaning. In this use it sometimes goes back to its old form of by; as behest, bequest, bypath, byword.

(e) To make prepositions and adverbs; as before, behind, besides.

3. For is the Anglo-Saxon and old English for, with the significance, as a prefix, of though or thorough.

(a) It intensifies the meaning of words to which it is prefixed; as forbid=command against; forget=let go (from memory); forlorn=utterly lost; forswear=swear thoroughly; that is, to anything.

(b) It sometimes conveys a negative meaning to the word to which it is prefixed; as in forgo=forego.

4. Fore is another form of for, with the significance of first, before, which it retains as a prefix; as forebode, forecast, forejudge.

5. Mis is an Anglo-Saxon combining form which, as a prefix, is used adjectively and adverbially in the sense of amiss, wrong, ill, wrongly; as misdeed, mislead, mischief, miscreant, mistake.

6. Un. This old inseparable prefix, or particle signifies not. It is widely attached to adjectives, participles and adverbs to give them a negative meaning, but is less prefixed to nouns. Examples:—unafraid, unbearable, unholy, unabased, unbeloved, unblushing, unbind.

7. Wan is an antique English form signifying lacking, but is less freely prefixed to nouns. Examples:—wanhope=wanting hope=despair.

8. With is a contraction of the Anglo-Saxon wither=against. It is seen in withdraw, withstand, withhold, withers=the parts which stand against, or resist, the strain in pulling.

English Separable Prefixes.—As already noted, these may stand alone as words and have independent meaning. When used as prefixes they speak, as it were, a little louder and stronger than the inseparable prefixes.

1. After is a frequent prefix, carrying its own signification; as in aftergrowth, aftermath=after the mowing, afterthought.

2. All, modern form of old English al, signifies whole or quite. It is seen in almighty, alone, almost, etc.

3. Forth, in the sense of forward, is seen in such words as forthcoming, forthword=forward, etc.

4. In, as a prefix, carries its own significance into:

(a) Inborn, income, inbred, incline, instep, inlay, inject, intrude, etc.

(b) In words derived from the Latin and beginning with l, the prefix in becomes il, as in illusion; in such words beginning with r it becomes r, as in irruption; in such words beginning with a labial, it becomes im, as in imbue, immigrate, impart.

(c) In its French form, en, still signifying in or into and chiefly as a prefix to words borrowed from the French it is seen in endear, entwine, enlighten, etc.

(d) Some English words are written indifferently with in or en; as, encase or incase, encircle or incircle, enclosure or inclosure.

(e) En is commonly changed to m if followed by a p, b, and m; as employ, embody, embitter, embolden, emmew.

(f) En, as a prefix to some words, conveys the sense of to make, or cause to be, as in enable=to make able; enfeeble=to cause to be feeble; it merely intensifies the word chasten in enchasten.

5. Off or of becomes a ready prefix in such words as offal=what falls off, offset, offshoot, offspring, etc.

6. On imparts its sense of motion to such words as onset, onslaught, onward.

7. Out imparts its sense of direction to such words as outbreak, outcast, outside, outpost. Outer becomes utter and outmost becomes utmost.

8. Over becomes a ready prefix carrying its native significance to nouns, adjectives and verbs; as overcoat, overhead, over-bold, over-proud, overturn, overspread, etc.

9. Through=Thorough attaches its sense of penetration or thoroughness to such words as throughout, thoroughfare, through-line, through-ticket, thoroughbred, etc.

10. Twi, in comparison, signifies two or double. It is seen in twice=two times; twilight=double or doubtful light; twin=double; twist=two strands (twisted).

11. Under imparts its sense of below or lower to a great number of words; as underhand, undertone, underlie, undergo, underneath, etc.

12. Up imparts its sense of upward direction to many nouns, verbs and other words; as upland, upshot, uphold, upbraid, upright, upward, etc.

LATIN AND FRENCH PREFIXES.

Though this heading mentions French prefixes, it must always be borne in mind that French is only a modified Latin, and that while as to prefixes French and Latin forms may differ, they have quite similar effects on the words to which they are attached. A great many, and very useful, prefixes have come into use in the English language both directly from Latin and indirectly from Latin through the French.

1. A or ab, away from, imparts its meaning to such words as avert, abjure, absent. In the French form of a and av it is seen in avaunt, avantage=advantage.

2. Ad, to, takes several forms in composition, according to the first consonant of the root before which it appears; as in adapt, affect, accord, aggression, allude, etc. In the French form of a it appears in achieve, amount, acquaint.

3. Amb or am, about, around; as in ambition, ambiguous, amputate=to cut around.

4. Ante, before; as in antedate, ante-chamber. It appears in the French form of an in ancestor=antecessor.

5. Bis and bi, twice, two; as in bias=two-faced; bisect; biscuit=twice baked.

6. Circum, around; as in circumference, circulate, circuit.

7. Cum, with, together, in conjunction with. It takes the form of com before b, m, p and sometimes f, and by assimilation becomes col before l, cor before r, and con before any consonant except b, h, l, m, p, r, and w. Before a vowel com becomes co; also before h and w; as in compound, collect, content, correct, counsel, coöperate.

8. Contra, against, contrary, in opposition. A very frequent prefix, assuming at times the French forms of contro and counter; as in contradict, controvert, counterbalance.

9. De, down, from, away; as in debark, decline, decease, deduct, decamp, etc. It is negative and opposite in derange, deform, destroy, etc., and it serves to intensify the meaning in deprave, despoil, declare, desolate, etc.

10. Dis, di, in two parts, asunder, separation, parting; as in dissimilar, disarm, disease, divorce. distribute, disconnect. In the French form of des, de, it is seen in defy, defer, delay. Dis also unites freely with English roots to make hybrids; as disown, dislike, distrust, distaste, etc.

11. Ex or e, out of, out, proceeding from; as in exalt, exhale, exclude, ex-president, ex-governor, etc. It has the sense of beyond in excess, exceed, excel. Ex takes the form of e before certain consonants; as in ebulient, elect, educe, emanate, enormous, evade.

12. Extra, beyond; as in extraneous, extraordinary, extravagant, etc.

13. In, in, into; as in invade, invent, infer. It also becomes il, im, ir, before certain consonants; as in illusion, improve, irritate, irrigate. In the French form of en or em it appears in enchant, endure, envoy, embody, embolden, etc.

14. In, not; as in inconvenient, inanimate, inattentive. It assumes the form of il, im, ir, ig, before certain consonants; as in illiberal, impious, irrelevant, ignoble.

15. Inter, intro, between, among; as in intercede, interpose, interfere, etc.; and takes the French form of en in entertain, enterprise, etc.

16. Mis is a combining form of the Latin minus, less; as seen in misadventure, mischance. It is usually confounded with the Anglo-Saxon mis, wrong, ill, as in mistake, misdeed, etc.

17. Non, not; as in nonage, nonsense, nonsuit.

18. Pene, almost; as in peninsula, penultimate.

19. Per, through; as in perform, perfect, perjure, permit.

20. Post, after; as in postpone, postdate, postscript.

21. Pre, before; as in, precede, precursor, prefix, preëminent, predict, pretend, prevent, etc.

22. Præter or Preter, beyond, more than; as in pretermission, preternatural, preterite=beyond the present.

23. Pro, before, in front, forth, for, in behalf of, in place of, according to; as in, propose=to place before; proceed=to go before; project=to throw forward; prologue=spoken before; propel=to drive before; provide=to look out for; pronoun=word for a noun; proconsul=in place of a consul; proportion=arranged according to parts. It also takes the form of pol, por and pur before certain consonants; as in pollute, portrait, pursue, purchase.

24. Re, back, again; as in rebel, reclaim, recover, refer, redeem, redound, etc.

25. Retro, backwards; as in retrograde, retrospect.

26. Se, apart; as in secede, seclude, seduce. sedition.

27. Sub, under, below; as in substract, subdue, subject, subordinate. It takes the form of suc in succor=to run under or to the aid of; of suf in suffer=to bear under; of sum in summon=to warn under; of sup in supplant=plant under; of sur in surrender=render under; of sus in suspend=to hang under.

28. Super, above, over, beyond; as in supernatural, superscription, supername=surname, surtout=over all.

29. Trans, beyond, over, on the other side; as in translate, transport, transform. Trans becomes tra in travel, tradition, traverse ; and tres in trespass=transpass.

30. Ultra, beyond; as in ultramarine, ultramontane, ultramundane, ultratropical.

31. Unus, one, which changes into un and uni; as in unanimous, uniform, unicorn.

32. Vice, in place of; as in viceroy=in place of a king; vicar=office of one assumed by an another; vice-president=who acts in absence of the president.

WORD-BUILDING BY THE USE OF SUFFIXES.

We have seen how English words are made by prefixing particles to roots, and how such prefixes affect the significance of the words to which they become attached. An equally effective way of making English words is by the use of suffixes; that is, by appending a letter, letters, syllable or syllables to the end of words or roots to modify their forms and meanings. Such suffixes are even more numerously employed in English than are the prefixes, and they are borrowed from the same general sources—old English or Anglo-Saxon, Latin or French, and Greek. From a strictly etymological point of view, it is not too much to say that suffixes have greater modifying power over words to which they are attached than prefixes.

English Suffixes to Nouns.—The most important are as follows:—

1. Ard or art, habitual, or one who has an excessive degree of the quality expressed by the root; as in braggart, coward, drunkard, laggard, reynard, sluggard, wizard.

2. Craft, strength, skill, art, cunning; as in woodcraft, priestcraft, witchcraft.

3. Suffixing the dental (teeth) sounds of d, t and th to English roots gives them new significance as well as change of form; as flood from flow; seed from sow; drift from drive; drought from dry; flight from fly; death from die; birth from bear; sloth from slow; health from heal, etc.

4. Dom, doom, authority, sovereignty, dominion; as in dukedom, earldom, kingdom, Christendom. It also signifies a state, condition or quality; as in wisdom, freedom, thraldom.

5. En imparts a diminutive meaning; as in chicken =little cock; kitten=little cat; maiden=little maid.

6. Er denotes:—

(a) The agent; as in farmer, fuller, hater, heater, grater, leader, writer, etc.

(b) After places it signifies a person of the place, as Londoner, Southerner, etc.

7. Hood, person, rank, order, condition; as in brotherhood, childhood, knighthood, manhood, priesthood, wifehood, etc.

8. Ing, part, act of, result of the act; as in farthing (fourth), riding, dying, feeling. It has a collective force in clothing, shipping.

9. Kin is a diminutive maker; as in bodkin, firkin, lambkin, mannikin.

10. Ling is also a diminutive maker; as in darling, firstling, gosling=little goose, hireling, nestling.

11. Le or l gives a diminutive meaning to roots; as in bundle, saddle=little seat.

12. Ness is used to convert adjectives into abstract nouns expressive of quality or state; as in darkness, goodness, greatness, holiness, weakness, weariness.

13. Ock is a diminutive; as in bullock, hillock, Pollock=little Paul.

14. M or om converts verbs into nouns; as in bloom from blow; gloom from glow; seam from sew; team from tow.

15. Red, mode or fashion; as in hatred, kindred. In proper nouns it signifies counsel, as Mildred=mild in counsel; Ethelred=noble in counsel.

16. Ric, power, dominion; as in bishopric.

17. Ship, state, office, shape, form, profession, art; as in chancellorship, fellowship, friendship, horsemanship, lordship, stewardship, workmanship, worship= worthship.

18. Stead, place; as in bedstead, homestead, instead.

19. Ster denotes an agent (originally a woman), especially a person who does something with skill, or as an occupation; as in spinster (originally a woman who spins), huckster, maltster, songster, roadster, baxster=bakester, youngster. Brewing, baking and weaving were originally female occupations, and brewster, baxster and webster meant the woman who brews, bakes or weaves. When men began to perform these duties the feminine forms were retained. Ster imparts a depreciative sense to such words as gamester, punster, oldster, youngster.

20. Ther, der or ter denote the agent and impart a sense of duality; as in father, mother, brother sister, bladder (blow), rudder (row), water (wet), winter (wind).

21. Wright, by a shift of the r=work or workman; as in millwright, shipwright, wheelwright.

22. Ward, keeper, as in hayward, steward=stykeeper, woodward.

English Suffixes to Adjectives.—Some of the more important are:—

1. Ed or d, which gives the past-participle ending; as in landed, talented.

2. En denotes material; as in golden, silvern, flaxen, oaken, wooden, etc. It is also an old ending for the past-participle; as in drunken, molten, hewn=hewen.

3. Ern, geographic direction or section; as in eastern, western, northern, southern.

4. Fast, firm; as in steadfast, rootfast, shamefast,

5. Fold, time or repetition; as in twofold, threefold, fourfold.

6. Ful or full but adds its native meaning; as in hateful, hopeful, needful, sinful.

7. Ish, relation, resemblance, similarity and sometimes operates as a diminutive force; as in selfish, boyish, brutish, whitish, blackish. In English, Irish, Scottish, etc., it shows a patrial relation.

8. Le diminishes the strength of the root; as in little, brittle, fickle.

9. Less, without, destitute; as in childless, fatherless, fearless, helpless, toothless.

10. Like attaches its own meaning to the noun; as in manlike, childlike, Godlike, warlike.

11. Ly is a softened form of like, and is seen in manly, womanly, ghastly=ghostly.

12. Ow is but a modern form of the old English ending u. It appears in callow, fallow, narrow, yellow, etc.

13. Right, straight=direct; as in downright, forthright, upright.

14. Some, like, same, full; as in gladsome=full of gladness, irksome, blithesome, gamesome, winsome.

15. Teen, ten; as in thirteen=three and ten, fourteen, fifteen, etc.

16. Ty, tens; as in thirty=three tens; forty, fifty, etc.

17. Ward, course or direction; as in awkward, homeward, toward, forward, seaward, westward.

18. Wise, way, manner, mode, fashion; as in lengthwise, likewise, nowise. The word ways is often substituted in the same sense; as in noways, lengthways.

19. Y is a variation of the Anglo-Saxon ig, which signified resemblance, or in the nature of; as in bloody, crafty, dusty, mighty, stony, etc.

Verb and Adverb Suffixes.—Suffixes, drawn from English, Latin, French and Greek sources, are also used to form and add significance to verbs and adverbs; but these are neither so numerous and important as those used with nouns and adjectives. Moreover, many of them but duplicate those already used, so that their mention here would hardly tend to further exemplify the principle involved in the use of suffixes.

LATIN AND FRENCH SUFFIXES.

These are numerous and of great importance in the making of English words. Perhaps a majority of the suffixes of Latin origin have taken on a French form, owing to the fact that after the Norman conquest of England (1066) the French (Norman-French) language was in intimate contact with the then existing English.

Latin and French Suffixes to Nouns.—The most important of these are:—

1. Age, which converts a root or stem into an abstract or collective noun; as in beverage, bondage, courage, homage, marriage, tonnage, vintage, etc.

2. An, connected with, belonging to; as in artisan, pagan, publican, Roman. It takes the form of Ain in chaplain, captain, and of ane in humane, mundane.

3. Al conveys a sense of quality; as in animal, canal, cardinal, hospital. It takes the form of el in chattel, hotel.

4. Ant implies agency; as in assistant, servant. It becomes ent in agent, student, etc.

5. Ance or ence is used to give nouns an abstract turn; as in abundance, distance, diligence. It does the same when used in the form of ancy or ency; as in brilliancy, consistency.

6. Ary signifies place for things; as in apiary, armory, granary. It takes the form of ry in treasury, vestry; and of er in larder, saucer, etc. Ary also designates a trade, profession or business; as in commissary, notary, secretary. It takes other forms; as in brigadier, engineer, mariner.

7. Ate implies agent; as in advocate, legate. In the French form of ee it sets forth the object of an action; as in grantee, trustee, vendee, etc.

8. Ce forms abstract nouns; as in benifice, edifice, palace, sacrifice, etc.

9. El forms diminutives; as in chapel, libel. It appears as le in angle, buckle, title, castle.

10. Ern, place, as in cavern, cistern, tavern, etc.

11. Et makes diminutives; as in lancet, puppet, ticket, turret. It appears as ette in etiquette=a little ticket; and as let in chaplet.

12. Ess gives a feminine form to an agent; as in Empress, governess, sorceress.

13. Ice lends an abstract sense; as in avarice, justice, etc.

14. Icle lends diminutive sense; as in article, particle. It becomes cel in parcel, morsel; and sel in damsel=little dame.

15. Ion. tion, sion denote act, action, process, result, state, condition; as in action, opinion, position, revolution, construction, mansion.

16. Ment, instrument or act; as in document, instrument, ornament, etc.

17. Mony renders nouns abstract; as in ceremony, matrimony, testimony.

18. On augments the force or meaning of a root or stem; as in flagon, million, clarion, etc. It appears as oon in balloon dragoon, saloon, etc.

19. Ory, place; as in auditory, dormitory, lavatory, etc.

20. Or makes abstract nouns; as in ardor, clamor, honor, savor. It also denotes agent; as in actor, governor, emperor.

21. Ter signifies person; as in master, minister.

22. Trix, feminine agency; as in executrix, testatrix.

23. Tude, state or condition; as in altitude, fortitude, multitude.

24. Ty forms abstract nouns; as in charity, frailty, poverty, vanity.

25. Y signifies condition; as in company, family, victory.

Latin and French Suffixes for Adjectives.—The Latin and French suffixes used in English to make adjectives are almost as numerous as those used with nouns. The most important are:—

1. Aceous, composed of; as in argillaceous, farinaceous.

2. Al, belonging to, as in legal, regal, loyal, royal.

3. Ar, belonging to; as in regular, singular, secular, etc.

4. Atic, belonging to; as in aquatic, fanatic, lunatic.

17. Und, full of; as in jocund, moribund, rotund.

Greek Suffixes.—These are not numerous but of great strength in English word-making. They are used principally in making nouns.

1. Y gives an abstract turn to nouns; as in melancholy, monarchy, philosophy.

2. Ic conveys the sense of accompaniment, belonging or relating to, characteristic of; as in aromatic, authentic, frantic, graphic, hygienic, logic, music, telegraphic, etc.

3. Ism, process, result, state; as in baptism, barbarism, despotism, galvanism, organism, hypnotism, socialism, Anglicism, etc.

4. Ma or m has little transforming power as a suffix; as in diorama, dogma, drama.

5. Sis denotes action; as in analysis, emphasis, genesis, paralysis, synthesis. It takes the form of sy in hypocrisy, poesy, palsy, which is a contraction of paralysis.

6. St signifies agent or agency; as in baptist, botanist. It is largely employed with Latin words in the making of hybrids; as in abolitionist, journalist, jurist, organist, socialist, specialist, etc.

7. T or te, agent, maker; as in comet=long-haired star; planet=wanderer; poet=maker; apostate=one fallen off or away.

8. Ter, place of, instrument; as in center, meter, theater. Tre in old spellings.

9. Isk forms diminutives; as in asterisk=little star; obelisk=little spit or pillar.

10. Ize makes verbs factitive or causative; as in baptize, criticise, Judaize, Anglicize.

WORD ROOTS AND DERIVATIONS.

When the English language was young, and while still uninfluenced by other languages, it had the power of growing words within itself; that is, of building new words upon its native roots. All words so grown or built had, and have, a family likeness. Take byrnan, to burn, as an example. This root gives us brimstone (burnstone); brown (burnt color), brunt (heat or shock of battle), brand (burnt in, also a piece of wood on fire), brindle (dark color on a gray ground, as if branded).

This power of English to grow its own words ceased after the Norman conquest (1066). When a new word was needed, after that period, it was found handier to take an old and somewhat ready-made word from the French (Norman), Latin or Greek, and give it a place in our language. It is well, however, to keep up acquaintance with those pure English words which grew upon our own native roots, and which owe nothing to other languages; such, for instance, as are found below; the same being chiefly due to Meikeljohn's "English Language."

Magnesia, from Magnesia, in Thessaly, because this light, earthy substance was first obtained from the metallic element found there.

Magnet, the loadstone, or silvery iron ore with magnetic properties, was originally known as Magnesian-stone, or stone from Magnesia, Thessaly.

Milliner, from Milaner, an inhabitant of Milan, in Italy; hence a man from Milan, who imported women's finery.

Muslin, from Mosul, a city of Mesopotamia, where the fabric was first manufactured.

Palace, from Palatium, one of the seven hills of Rome on which Augustus had his residence. Hence the general meaning of house of a king or ruler.

Peach, the apple or fruit from Persia—Persian apple. The word came into Latin in the form of persica, into French as pesche, into Old English as peche.

Pheasant is the Phasian bird; that is, the bird from the river Phasis, a river in Colchis or Pontus, Asia Minor, whence they were first brought.

Port, the dark red wine made in, or shipped from, Oporto, Portugal.

Rhubarb comes into English through the French rhubarbe, which was the Latin rheubarbarum = wild Rha plant; that is, the plant which grew on the banks of the river Rha (old name for the Volga), in Russia.

Sherry, the Spanish light-colored wine, so called from Xeres, a town near Cadiz, the x in Spanish having been formerly pronounced like sh in English.

Solecism is the Greek word soloikos, speaking incorrectly, from the corruption of the Attic dialect among the Athenian colonists of Soloi, a town in Cilicia, Asia Minor.

Spaniel, the dog peculiar to Hispania = Spain.

Stoic is from the Greek word stoa, the roofed colonnade, or porch, in Athens, where Zeno and his successors taught.

Utopian, from Eutopia, an imaginary island, represented in Sir Thomas More's work, called Utopia, as a place enjoying perfection in politics, law, and the like.

A STUDY OF THE FORMS AND RELATIONS OF ENGLISH SPEECH.

LANGUAGE. Spoken language consists of a number of connected sounds conveying the idea or meaning of one using them. There must, too, be a hearer of such sounds who has agreed that they shall mean what the speaker desires to express. When a large number of people are so agreed, spoken language becomes a vehicle of expression in a wide sense. But as people grow more intelligent, the need of a written language begins to be felt. Therefore, all civilized peoples have, in the course of time and not without difficulty, made themselves a set of signs by means of which the sounds agreed upon for expression of ideas may be indicated on paper, that is, may become written or printed. These signs take the form of letters, and the science of letters is called Alphabetics, while the science of sounds is called Phonetics.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

Parts of Grammar.—Grammar considers and examines language from its smallest parts up to its most complex parts. The smallest part of a written language is a letter; the next smallest part is a word; with words we make sentences; with words we also make musically measured sentences, or verse. There are, then, four kinds or parts of grammar:

(i) Orthography, or the grammar of letters. Orthography literally means right writing, or the part of grammar which treats of letters and the art of spelling correctly.

(ii) Etymology, or the grammar of words. Etymology literally means true account, or the part of grammar which relates to the changes in the form of words in the language; inflection.

(iii) Syntax, or the grammar of sentences. Syntax literally means together in order, or the part of grammar which treats of the proper construction of sentences.

(iv) Prosody, or the grammar of musical or measured verse. Prosody literally means to or for a song, or the part of grammar which treats of the quantity of syllables, of accent, and of the laws of versification or metrical composition.

ORTHOGRAPHY;

Or, the Grammar of Sounds and Letters.

Sounds.—In English there are two kinds of sounds: (i) open sounds, (ii) stopped sounds. The open sounds are called vowels, the stopped sounds consonants.

Vowels.—Vowels do not need the aid of other letters to enable them to be sounded. When two vowels are sounded together in a word, as oi in boil, or ai in aisle, they are called a diphthong; when three are sounded together, as eau in beauty, they are called a triphthong.

The vowels are a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes w and y. All other letters are consonants.

W and y are vowels except when they precede a vowel sound in the same syllable. W in won is a consonant; but w in law is a vowel. Y in young is a consonant; but y in boy is a vowel.

Consonants.—There are different ways of stopping or checking the continuous flow of sound.

(i) Labials.—Labial pertains to the lip. When sounds are stopped by the lips, as in ib, ip, such consonants are called Labials.

(ii) Dentals.—Dental pertains to the teeth. When sounds are stopped by the teeth, as in id, it, such consonants are called Dentals.

(iii) Gutturals.—Guttural pertains to the throat. When sounds are stopped in the throat, as in ig, ik, such consonants are called Gutturals.

(iv) Palatals.—Palatal pertains to the palate. Sounds uttered by the aid of the palate, as k in kirk, are called Palatals.

The first three of the above set of sounds are classed as Mutes, because the sound comes to a sudden stop. Some consonants do not stop abruptly, but have a prolonged sound; such are called Spirants, or breathing letters.

The Alphabet.—The letters of any language are called its Alphabet. The English alphabet contains twenty-six letters. These letters represent some forty-three separate sounds. The alphabet is, therefore, not a perfect one, the vowels chiefly being called upon to do more than their share of work. Yet such letters as c, q, x, w and y could be dispensed with, for the work of c could be done by a k or s; that of q by k; x equals ks or gs; w could be represented by oo, and the work of y could be done by i.

ETYMOLOGY;

Or, the Grammar of Words.

Classification of Words.—There are nine kinds or classes of words in our language. They are commonly called "Parts of Speech." These parts of speech are classed and defined as follows:

I.—THE ARTICLE.

The Article is the word a, an or the placed before a noun to show whether it is used definitely or indefinitely.

(1) A is called the Indefinite Article, and the the Definite Article.

(2) A is written before a consonant sound, as a cow, a bird. The article a is written an when placed before a vowel sound; as an eagle, an ass.

(3) A or an means one, and is used only before the singular number; as a man, an apple.

(4) The Definite Article the designates some particular noun, and is used before both the singular and plural numbers; as the house, the houses.

Some grammarians class articles with adjectives, as modifying words with limited power.

II.—THE NOUN.

A noun is the name of any person, place or thing; it is also any word or words used as a name. John, ball, house, book, are all names, therefore nouns. To walk is healthful; here to walk is the name of an action, and is, therefore, a noun.

(1) Nouns are of two classes, Proper and Common.

(2) A Proper noun is the name of an individual, and is given to only one of a class of objects; as John, London, Shakespeare. It should always begin with a capital letter.

(3) A Common noun is the name of a person, place or thing, considered not merely as an individual, but as one of a class; as horse, town, boy, river.

(4) A Collective noun is the name of a collection of persons or things looked upon as one; as army, committee, crowd. It is also called a noun of multitude.

(5) Gender.—Nouns have Gender, which is a mode of distinguishing their sex. There are three genders, Masculine, Feminine and Neuter.

(6) The Masculine gender denotes objects of the male sex; as Harry, boy, man.

(7) The Feminine gender denotes objects of the female sex; as Girl, Harriet, woman.

(8) The Neuter gender denotes objects without sex; as tree, house, London.

(9) Some grammarians make a fourth gender, called the Common gender, when the sex cannot be exactly told; as sheep, bird, servant.

(10) Gender may be distinguished in four ways:

(a) By the use of different words; as boy, girl; horse, mare; husband, wife.

(b) By different terminations of the noun; as actor, actress; host, hostess; duke, duchess.

(c) By the use of prefixes; as man-servant, maid-servant; he goat, she goat.

(d) By the use of suffixes; as pea-cock, pea-hen; school-master, school-mistress.

(11) Number.—Number in nouns is the mode of telling whether we are speaking of one thing or more than one. There are two numbers, the Singular and Plural. The Singular number denotes a single thing, or one. The Plural number denotes more than one. Plurals are formed as follows:

(a) The first mode is by adding s or es to the singular; as book, books; house, houses; pen, pens. The plural is formed by adding es when the nouns end in ch, s, sh, x and z; as church, churches; gas, gases; box, boxes.

(b) The second mode is by adding ves to nouns ending in f or fe; as, loaf, loaves; thief, thieves; life, lives, first omitting the f or fe.

(c) When a noun ends in y, preceded by a consonant, plurals are made by changing the y into ies; as, lady, ladies. But when the y follows a vowel the plural is formed by simply adding an s; as, boy, boys; day, days.

(d) A fourth mode is by adding en, with sometimes an addition or change of a letter in the word; as, ox, oxen; child, children; brother, brethren.

(e) A fifth mode is by changing the vowel sound of the noun; as, man, men; foot, feet; tooth, teeth.

(f) Some nouns have the same form in the plural as in the singular; as deer, sheep, trout, mackerel.

(g) Some nouns can be used only in the plural; as, bellows, ashes, molasses.

(12) Person.—Nouns have Person, which gives their distinction in relation to the speaker. There are three persons, First, Second and Third.

(a) The First person denotes the speaker; as, I, William, am talking.

(b) The Second person denotes the person spoken to; as, George, please do not cry.

(c) The Third person denotes the person spoken of; as, The boys are very good.

(13) Case.—Case is the form given to a noun to show its relation to other words in the sentence. Nouns have three cases, Nominative, Possessive and Objective.

(a) The Nominative case is that in which a noun is the subject of a verb. It always answers to the question Who? or What? and has always a verb that goes with it, and asserts something about it; as, John strikes. Who strikes? Ans., John. What does John do? Ans., John strikes.

(b) The Possessive case denotes ownership or possession. It is used chiefly with nouns that are the names of living beings. In the singular number it is formed by adding to the nominative case an apostrophe (') and an s; as, John's book; a cat's tail.

When the nominative is plural and ends in an s, an apostrophe only is added; as, The attorneys' book; the peoples' party; but when the plural does not end in s, both the apostrophe and s must be added; as, men's works.

(c) The Objective case is the object of an active transitive verb or preposition, and is generally placed after the verb. It may be found by putting whom? or what? after the verb or preposition and asking the question. John struck his brother. Struck whom? Ans., Brother. Therefore brother is the object of the verb "struck." Susan went into the house. Into what? Ans., House. Therefore house is the object of the preposition "into."

(14) Declension or Inflection of Nouns.—The foregoing changes in the forms of nouns (also of pronouns), to indicate their gender, number, person and case, are called Declension. When you speak of these changes in connection with parts of speech in general they are called Inflection. An arrangement showing declension would appear thus:

Singular.			Plural.
Nom.	Poss.	Obj.	Nom.	Poss.	Obj.
Friend,	friend's,	friend.	Friends,	friends',	friends.
Man,	man's,	man.	Men,	men's,	men.
Church,	church's,	church.	Churches,	churches',	churches.
Lady,	lady's,	lady.	Ladies,	ladies',	ladies.
City,	city's,	city.	Cities,	cities',	cities.

The student should extend this arrangement of declension to other nouns.

III.—THE ADJECTIVE.

The Adjective is a word that goes with a noun to describe or modify it. It is a noun marking word; as, a white rose, a great man.

(1) Adjectives do not always stand before the noun they describe or modify. We may say, The studious girl, or The girl is studious. In either case girl is described or modified.

(2) Nouns may become adjectives when used to express some quality of other nouns; as, iron rod, sea water.

(3) Some adjectives are used as nouns, and therefore take a plural form, and may take case; as, Romans, Christians, superiors.

(4) Numeral Adjectives.—Numeral adjectives are those which express number. They are of three kinds, Cardinal, Ordinal and Multiplicative.

(a) The Cardinal Adjectives denote number or quantity; as, one, two, three, four.

(b) The Ordinal Adjectives denote order or arrangement; as, first, second, third.

(c) The Multiplicatives denote how many times; as, single, double, triple.

(5) Comparison of Adjectives.—Adjectives are made to vary by Comparison. There are three Degrees of Comparison; the Positive, Comparative and Superlative.

(a) The Positive Degree is the simple form of the adjective, expressive of quality; as, great, small, white.

(b) The Comparative Degree expresses the quality in a higher or lower degree; as, greater, smaller, whiter. The comparative degree brings together only two ideas. Thus we may speak of the "greater of the two," but not "of the three."

(c) The Superlative Degree expresses quality in the highest or lowest degree; as, greatest, smallest, whitest. It requires that three things shall be compared. Thus it would be incorrect to say: "He is the tallest of the two."

(d) In words of one syllable the Comparative Degree is commonly formed by adding er, and the Superlative by adding est, to the Positive Degree; as, great, greater, greatest. When adjectives have more than one syllable they are usually compared by prefixing to the Positive Degree the words more and most; as, recent, more recent, most recent; numerous, more numerous, most numerous.

(e) The most frequently used adjectives have irregular comparisons. Here is a partial list:

Positive.	Comparative.	Superlative.
Bad,	worse,	worst.
Ill,	worse,	worst.
Far,	farther,	farthest.
Fore,	former,	foremost.
Good,	better,	best.
Hind,	hinder,	hindmost.
Little,	less,	least.
Many,	more,	most.
Much,	more,	most.
Nigh,	nigher,	nighest (next).
Old,	older,	oldest.
Old,	elder,	eldest.

IV.—THE PRONOUN.

A Pronoun is a word that is used instead of a noun. We say, "John went away yesterday; he looked quite happy." In this case the pronoun he stands in the place of John.

Pronouns are divided into three classes: Personal, Relative and Adjective. Personal and Relative pronouns have Gender, Number, Person and Case. Adjective pronouns have Number only.

(1) Personal Pronouns.—Personal Pronouns are so called because they denote person by themselves, without reference to any other word. Personal Pronouns are three in number; (1) The Personal Pronoun of the First Person, which is I, and indicates the person speaking; (2) The Personal Pronoun of the Second Person, which is Thou, and indicates the person spoken to; (3) The Personal Pronoun of the Third Person, which is He, She, It, and indicates the person spoken of.

(a) The First Personal Pronoun has, of course, no distinction of gender, and is thus declined:

	Singular.	Plural.
Nominative,	I,	We.
Possessive,	My, or Mine,	Our, or Ours.
Objective,	Me,	Us.

(b) The Second Personal Pronoun has no distinction of gender, and is thus declined:

	Singular.	Plural.
Nominative,	Thou,	You, or ye.
Possessive,	Thine, or Thy,	You, or yours.
Objective,	Thee	You.

(c) The Third Personal Pronoun requires the distinction of gender, because it is necessary to indicate the sex of the person we are talking of. It is thus declined:

	Singular.		Plural.
	Masculine.	Feminine.	Neuter.	All Genders.
Nom.,	He,	She,	It,	They.
Poss.,	His,	Her, or Hers,	Its,	Their, or Theirs.
Obj.,	Him,	Her,	It,	Them.

(d) Out of the above pronoun forms are made the Compound Personal Pronouns, which are myself, thyself, himself, herself and itself, with their plurals ourselves, yourselves, themselves.

(2) Relative Pronouns.—Relative Pronouns are those which relate to some word going before, called the antecedent. They are Who, Which, What and That. They are always of the same gender, number and person as their antecedents.

(a) Who is used in speaking of persons; as, "The boy who died;" "The girl who sang."

In asking questions Who is called an Interrogative Pronoun; and in answering questions it is called a Responsive.

(b) Which is used in speaking of inferior animals and things without life; as, "The horse which I sold;" "The house which John built."

In asking questions Which is called an Interrogative Pronoun; and in answering questions, a Responsive.

(c) Who and Which are alike in both numbers, and are thus declined:

Sing. and Plural.		Sing. and Plural.
Nominative,	Who.	Nominative,	Which.
Possessive,	Whose.	Possessive,	Whose.
Objective,	Whom.	Objective,	Which.

(d) That may be used in the place of Who or Which. That and What are indeclinable.

(e) What, as a relative pronoun, takes the place of Which when the antecedent is omitted, and may be used in either the singular or plural. In the sentence,

"This is the thing which I wanted," if we omit the antecedent (thing) we are compelled to say, "This is what I wanted."

In asking questions What is called an Interrogative Pronoun, and in answering questions, a Responsive.

(f) There are Compound Relative Pronouns; as, Whoever, whosoever, whichever, whichsoever, whatever, whatsoever. They are all indeclinable except whosoever, which is thus declined:

	Singular and Plural.
Nominative,	Whosoever.
Possessive,	Whosesoever.
Objective,	Whomsoever.

(3) Adjective Pronouns.—Adjective Pronouns modify or limit a noun like adjectives. They are sometimes called Pronominal Adjectives. They are divided into three classes, Distributives, Demonstratives and Indefinites.

(a) The Distributives are each, every, either, neither. They refer separately and singly to each person or thing of a number of persons or things.

Each is used in speaking of two or more; as, "Each of you must walk home."

Every is used when speaking of more than two; as, "Every one of you must walk home."

Either means one or the other, but not both; as, "Either of you may go."

Neither means not either; as, "Neither this nor that."

(b) The Demonstratives point out in a definite manner the objects to which they relate. They are This and That, with their plurals, These and Those. "This boy is white, but that boy is black." "These horses are large, but those horses are small."

(c) The Indefinites point out in an indefinite manner the objects to which they relate. They are any, all, such, some, both, one, none, other, another. One. other, another may be used as nouns, and are then declined as nouns are.

V.—THE VERB.

The Verb is that part of speech by means of which we make an assertion or affirmation. It is the keystone of the arch of speech. If I say, "William talks," I assert of William that he does something. What do I assert of William? Answer, That he talks. Therefore talks is a verb.

(1) Verbs are divided into two classes, Transitive and Intransitive.

(2) A Transitive Verb denotes an action or feeling which passes over from the doer of the action to the object of the action; as, "The boy broke the stick." Here the action of breaking passes over to the object stick.

(3) An Intransitive Verb denotes a state, feeling or action that does not pass over, but terminates in the doer or agent; as, "He sleeps," "She walks,' "The grass grows."

(4) Inflections of Verbs.—Verbs are changed or modified for Voice, Mood, Tense, Number and Person. These changes are expressed partly by inflection and partly by the use of auxiliary verbs.

(5) Voice.—Voice is that attribute or form of the verb which shows whether the subject of the verb acts or is acted upon. Verbs have two voices, the Active Voice and the Passive Voice.

(a) The Active Voice is that form of the verb which shows that the subject acts, or does what the verb mentions; as, "Jane jumps the rope."

(b) The Passive Voice is that form of the verb which shows that the subject is acted upon; as, "The rope is jumped by Jane."

(c) The Passive voice of a verb is formed by using a part of the verb to be and the past participle of the verb; thus:

Active.	Passive.
I beat.	I am beaten.
I have beaten.	I have been beaten.

(6) Mood.—The Mood of a verb is the manner in which the statement made by the verb is presented to the mind; or, Mood denotes the manner or way in which what the verb asserts is expressed. Is a statement made directly? Is a command given? Is a statement subjoined to another? All these are different Moods or modes. There are five Moods: The Indicative, the Subjunctive, the Potential, the Imperative and the Infinitive.

(a) The Indicative Mood makes a direct assertion or puts a question in a direct manner; as, "John is ill;" "Is John ill?" "John Strikes." "Is John ill?" is sometimes called the Interrogative form.

(b) The Subjunctive Mood expresses what the verb asserts in the form of a supposition, a doubt, a wish or future contingency. It is always accompanied by another verb in some other mood; that is to say, it is alway used in a sentence that is subjoined to a principal sentence; as, "If it rain to-day, you cannot go out;" "O that he were here!" "Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty."

The Subjunctive Mood is generally preceded by such conjunctions as if, though, although, unless, except, whether, lest. Such words are called signs of the Subjunctive Mood.

The Subjunctive Mood is rapidly dying out of use in modern English.

(c) The Potential Mood is that form of the verb which is used to express possibility, liberty, power, will, obligation or necessity by the use of may, can, must, might, could, would, or should; as, "I may go;" "He can write," etc.

Questions may be asked in the Potential Mood; as, "May I go?" "Must he write?" etc.

(d) The Imperative Mood is the mood of command, request or entreaty; as, "Go!" "Give me the book;" "Do come back!"

The Imperative Mood takes its subject in the second person as thou or you, which is seldom expressed; as, "Go out," equal to "Thou or you go out."

(e) The Infinitive Mood is that form of the verb which has no reference to any agent or is not limited to a subject; that is, it is unlimited by person, number or time. It is a verb in itself, pure and simple; as, "To ask;" "To write."

The preposition to is called the sign of the Infinitive Mood.

The Infinitive is really a noun, and may be used in both the nominative and objective cases; as, "To err is human;" "I wish to go."

(7) Tense.—Tense is the form the verb takes to indicate time. There are Six Tenses: The Present, the Past, the Future, the Present-Perfect, the Past-Perfect and the Future-Perfect.

(a) The Present Tense is that form of the verb which indicates simply present time; as, "I love."

(b) The Past Tense is that form of the verb which indicates simply past time; as, "I loved."

(c) The Future Tense is that form of the verb which indicates simply future time; as, "I shall love."

(d) The Present-Perfect Tense is that form of the verb which indicates what is past, and yet what is connected with the present time; as, "I have loved." Here the language implies that which is past and completed, but does not preclude the idea of still loving.

(e) The Past-Perfect Tense is that form of the verb which indicates what was past and completed before some other event which is also past; as, "I had loved." Here had loved implies what was past and completed before some other past event caused love to cease.

(f) The Future-Perfect Tense is that form of the verb which indicates a future time in advance of some other future time; as, "I shall have loved;" that is, I shall have done so before some other future happening.

(8) Participles.—A Participle is a form of the verb which has the function of both a verb and an adjective. There are three Participles: The Present, the Past or Perfect and the Compound-Perfect.

(a) The Present Participle always ends in ing, and indicates what is now going on; as, loving, going, running.

(b) The Past or Perfect Participle indicates what is complete or finished; as, loved, gone, written. In regular verbs it ends in ed; in irregular verbs its ending is arbitrary. (See examples of irregular verbs.)

(c) The Compound-Perfect Participle indicates that which is finished before something else mentioned; as, having loved; having written.

(9) Number.—Verbs are modified by Number. There are in verbs two numbers, the Singular and the Plural. In the Singular we say, "He writes;" in the Plural, "They write."

(10) Person.—Verbs are modified by Person—that is, the form of the verb is changed to suit (i) the first person, (ii) the second person, or (iii) the third person; as (i) "I write." (ii) "Thou writest." (iii) "He writes."

(a) Verbs must agree in number and person with their subjects.

(b) Number and person appear thus in connection with the irregular verb to be:

Singular.		Plural.
First Person,	I am.	First Person,	We are.
Second Person,	Thou art.	Second Person,	You are.
Third Person,	He is.	Third Person,	They are.

(11) Regular and Irregular Verbs.—A verb is said to be Regular when it forms its Past Tense and Past Participle by adding ed to the present tense; as, Present, love; Past, loved; Past Participle, loved.

A verb is said to be Irregular when it does not form its Past Tense and Past Participle by the addition of ed to the present tense; as, Present, write; Past, wrote; Past Participle, written.

(a) Examples of Regular Verbs:

Present Tense.	Past Tense.	Past Participle.
Love,	loved,	loved.
Walk,	walked,	walked.
Rain,	rained,	rained.
Push,	pushed,	pushed.

(b) The Irregular Verbs are:

Present.	Past.	Past Part.
Abide,	abode,	abode.
Am—Is,	was,	been.
Arise,	arose,	arisen.
Awake,	awoke, awaked,	awaked,
Bear (to bring forth),	bore, bare,	born.
Bear (to carry),	bore,	borne.
Beat,	beat,	beat, beaten.
Begin,	began,	begun.
Bend,	bended, bent,	bended, bent.
Bereave,	bereaved, bereft,	bereaved, bereft.
Beseech,	besought,	besought.
Bestride,	bestrid, bestrode,	bestrid, bestridden.
Bid,	bid, bade,	bid, bidden.
Bind,	bound,	bound.
Bite,	bit,	bitten, bit.
Bleed,	bled,	bled,
Blow,	blew,	blown.
Break,	broke,	broken.
Breed,	bred,	bred.
Bring,	brought,	brought.
Build,	built, builded,	built, builded.
Burn,	burned, burnt,	burned, burnt.
Burst,	burst,	burst.
Buy,	bought,	bought.
Cast,	cast,	cast.
Catch,	caught, catched,	caught, catched.
Chide,	chide, chode,	chid, chidden.
Choose,	chose,	chosen, chose.
Cleave (to split),	cleft, clove,	cleft, cloven.
Cling,	clung,	clung.
Clothe,	clothed, clad,	clothed, clad.
Come,	came,	come.
Cost,	cost,	cost.
Creep,	crept,	crept.
Crow,	crew, crowed,	crowed.
Cut,	cut,	cut.
Dare (to venture),	dared, durst,	dared.
Deal,	dealed, dealt,	dealed, dealt.
Dig,	dug, digged,	dug, digged.
Do,	did,	done.
Draw,	drew,	drawn.
Dream,	dreamed, dreamt,	dreamed, dreamt.
Drink,	drank,	drunk.
Drive,	drove,	driven.
Dwell,	dwelled, dwelt,	dwelled, dwelt.
Eat,	eat, ate,	eat, eaten.
Fall,	fell,	fallen.
Feed,	fed,	fed.
Feel,	felt,	felt.
Fight,	fought,	fought.
Find,	found,	found.
Flee,	fled,	fled.
Fling,	flung,	flung.
Fly,	flew,	flown.

(12) Defective Verbs.—Many verbs cannot be used in all the moods and tenses; as, must, ought, quoth. They are called Defective verbs.

(13) Auxiliary Verbs.—Auxiliary Verbs are helping verbs; they help to form the moods and tenses of other verbs. They are shall, may, can, must, be, do, have and will.

(a) Be, do, have and will, are sometimes used as principal verbs, and when so used they have all the moods and tenses of other verbs; as, they may be away; they do nothing; they have something; they will it to be done.

(b) The verb to be as an auxiliary is used in all its moods, tenses, numbers and persons to form the passive voice of other words; as, I am loved, I was loved, I have been loved.

(c) To be is irregular and intransitive, and has no voice. Only transitive verbs have voice.

(14) Conjugation is the name given to the sum-total of all the inflections and combinations of the parts of the verb, as heretofore seen; or, it is the orderly arrangement of its voices, moods, tenses, numbers and persons.

(15) Conjugation of the irregular verb To be. Observe the use made of the auxiliaries shall and will in the future tenses, indicative mood, of to be. Shall in the first person, and will in the second and third persons, express future action simply. But if will be used in the first person, and shall in the second and third persons, then a promise or threat is implied.

Present. To be loved. Present-Perfect. To have been loved.

PARTICIPLES.

Present, Being loved, Past or Perfect, Loved.
Compound-Perfect, Having been loved.

(c) The Progressive Form of a verb represents action, as in progress, but not complete, and is made by placing before its present participle the moods, tenses, numbers and persons of the verb To be; as, "I am singing." "I was singing." "I shall be singing."

(d) The Emphatic Form of verbs is produced by placing the word Do, as an auxiliary, before them; as, I do love. This use of Do is proper only in the present and past tenses of the indicative and subjunctive moods and in the imperative.

VI.—THE ADVERB.

(1) An Adverb is a word which goes with a verb, adjective or other adverb, to modify its meaning; as, "He writes badly;" "The weather is very hot;" "She writes very rapidly."

(2) Comparison, as with adjectives, may modify Adverbs; as, soon, sooner, soonest. Adverbs ending in ly are compared by prefixing more and most, less and least; as, more or less happily; most or least happily.

(3) Adverbs, so far as their meaning is concerned, are of several kinds or classes:

(a) Adverbs of Manner or Quality; as, Well, ill; slowly, quickly; better, worse.

(b) Place; as, Here, there; hither, thither.

(c) Time; as, Now, then; to-day, to-morrow.

(d) Quantity; as, Much, little, enough.

(e) Direction; as, Downward, upward, forward.

(f) Number and Order; as, First, secondly; once, twice; singly, doubly.

(g) Affirmation and Denial; as, Yes, no; indeed, no-wise.

(h) Interrogation; as, How, why, when, where.

(i) Comparison; as, More, most; better, best.

(j) Uncertainty; as, perhaps, possibly, probably.

VII.—THE CONJUNCTION.

(1) A Conjunction is a word that connects words, sentences, or part of sentences; as, John and Jane are happy; Two and three are five.

(2) The principal conjunctions are: After, also, although, and, as, because, both, but, either, for, if, lest, neither, nor, or, since, than, that, then, therefore, though, unless, wherefore, whether, yet.

VIII.—PREPOSITIONS.

(1) A Preposition is a word which connects a noun or pronoun with a verb, an adjective, or another noun or pronoun, and shows the relation between the words it connects. "He stood on the table." Here the preposition on joins the verb stood and the noun table, and shows the relation between them. "Mary is fond of music." Here the preposition of joins the adjective fond and the noun music, and shows the relation between them. "The man at the door is waiting." Here the preposition at joins the two nouns man and door, and shows the relation between them.

(2) The noun or pronoun which follows a preposition is in the objective case, and is said to be governed by the preposition.

(3) Prepositions are divided into two classes, Simple and Compound.

(a) The Simple Prepositions are, at, after, by, down, for, from, in, of, on, over, past, round, since, through, till, to, under, up, with.

(b) The Compound Prepositions are formed by uniting two words or parts of words. They are: above, about, across, against, along, amid, amidst, among, amongst, around, athwart, before, behind, below, beneath, beside, besides, between, betwixt, beyond, upon, toward, towards, unto, into, within, without, throughout, underneath.

IX.—THE INTERJECTION.

Interjections are words which have no meaning in themselves, but which give sudden expression to an emotion of the mind. They are followed by the exclamation mark; as, Oh! ah! alas!

(a) Among other exclamations the Interjections embrace adieu, ah, aha, alack, alas, begone, ha, hail, halloo, hark, hist, ho, hum, hush, huzza, lo, O, oh, pshaw, see.

SYNTAX AND ANALYSIS.

(1) The word Syntax is from the Greek, and means arrangement. Syntax, in grammar, is that part of it which treats of the construction of sentences; the due arrangement of words in sentences in their necessary relations, according to established usage in language.

(2) Syntax is usually divided into two parts, Concord and Government.

(a) Concord means agreement. The chief concords in grammar are those of the verb with its subject; the adjective with the noun; one noun with another; the pronoun with the noun it stands for; the relative pronoun with its antecedent.

(b) Government is the influence one word has upon another. The chief kinds of government are those of the transitive verb and the noun; a preposition and a noun.

(3) Analysis treats of the separation of a sentence into the parts which compose it.

I.—SYNTAX OF THE NOUN.

1. THE NOMINATIVE CASE.

RULE I.—The Subject of a verb must be in the Nominative Case.

(a) Thus we say, "I write;" "John writes;" here both I and John are the subjects of write, and are in the nominative case.

(b) The subject of a verb may be (1) a noun; as, John writes. (2) A pronoun; as, He is good. (3) A verb in the infinitive mood; as, To sing is a pleasure. (4) A participle; as, Reading promotes knowledge. (5) A sentence or part of a sentence; as, Thou shalt not kill is a commandment. All the above are used as nouns.

(c) The usual place of a subject of a verb is before the verb.

(d) In simple address, when a noun or pronoun is not the subject of a verb, it is said to be in the Nominative Case Independent.

Rule II.—When one noun is used to explain or describe another, the two nouns are said to be in Apposition, and they are always in the same case.

Thus: "So work the honey-bees, Creatures that teach the art of order." Here bees is the nominative of work, and Creatures, being in apposition with bees, must also be in the nominative case. Nouns in apposition may be, in any case, nominative, possessive or objective.

Rule III.—The verb to be, and other verbs of a like nature, take two nominatives, one before, and the other after.

Thus: General Chaffee is a brave soldier. Here Chaffee and soldier refer to the same person. One is nominative before, the other nominative after is. The is does nothing but connect them, and is called the Copula.

Rule IV.—The verbs became, be-called, be-named, live, turn-out, prove, remain, seem, look, and others of appositional meaning, take a nominative case after them as well as before them.

Thus: Tom became an architect. Here Tom and architect designate the same person. One is nominative before, the other nominative after, became.

Rule V.—A noun and an adjective, or a noun and a participle, or a noun and adjective phrase, not connected with any other word in a sentence, are put in the Nominative Absolute.

Thus: The wind shifting, we sailed slowly; Dinner over, we went up stairs. Here the words in italics are in the nominative absolute.

2. The Possessive Case.

Rule VI.—A noun or pronoun in the Possessive Case depends on the noun signifying the thing possessed.

Thus: John's gun. Here John's depends on, or is governed by, gun, the thing possessed.

Rule VII.—When two Possessives are in apposition, or when several nouns connected by and are in the possessive case, the sign of the possessive is affixed to the last only.

Thus: George Washington's farewell address. For thy servant David's sake. Messrs. Miller and Jones' house.

3. The Objective Case.

Rule VIII.—The Direct Object of an active-transitive verb is put in the Objective Case.

Thus: We met the man. We met him. I like to work.

In the first instance the noun man is the objective; in the second, the pronoun him; in the third, the infinitive to work.

(a) The Objective Case is that case of a noun or pronoun governed by a transitive verb or a preposition. A direct object answers to question Whom? or What?

Rule IX.—Verbs of teaching, asking, making, appointing, etc., take two objectives.

Thus: He teaches me grammar. They made him manager.

Rule X.—Some Intransitive verbs take an objective, if it is similar to the verb itself.

Thus: To die the death. To sleep the sleep.

Rule XI.—Limitations of a verb by phrases expressing space, time, measure, etc., are in the objective case.

Thus: He walked three miles. The stone weighed ten pounds.

II.—SYNTAX OF THE ARTICLE.

Rule XII.—An Article modifies the noun to which it relates.

Thus: James wrote a letter. He opened the book. Here a is the indefinite article modifying letter; and the the definite article modifying book.

III.—SYNTAX OF THE ADJECTIVE.

Rule XIII.—An Adjective modifies the noun or pronoun to which it relates.

Thus: James wrote a long letter. Here the adjective long modifies or describes the noun letter.

(a) Sometimes the noun which the adjective describes or modifies is omitted; as, Of two evils choose the least; that is, the least evil.

(b) An Adjective sometimes modifies a verb in the infinitive mood, or a part of a sentence; as, To play is pleasant. Use of profane language is wicked. Here pleasant modifies the infinitive to play; and wicked modifies the part of the sentence, use of profane language.

(c) An Adjective may, especially in poetry, be used as an abstract noun; as, the True; the Good; the Beautiful.

(d) The Distributive Adjective pronouns, each, every, either, neither, go with singular nouns only; as, Each boy got an apple; Either book will do.

(e) Of the Demonstrative Adjective pronouns, this and that are singular, these and those plural.

(f) A Participle is a pure adjective and modifies the noun or pronoun to which it relates; as, The boy, loving his mother, ran to meet her. Here the participle loving relates to the noun boy and modifies it.

IV.—SYNTAX OF THE PRONOUN.

Rule XIV.—A Pronoun agrees with the noun or pronoun for which it stands, in Gender, Number and Person.

(a) With Collective nouns, when the idea is singular, the pronoun must be in the singular, neuter; as, The class is too large; it must be divided. But if the idea be plural, the pronoun must be plural; as, Send the multitude away that they may buy bread.

(b) When a pronoun stands for two or more words connected by and, it should be in the plural; as, William and James passed by; I saw them.

(c) When a pronoun stands for two words connected by and, both words expressive of the same subject, it should be in the singular; as, My Lord and Savior, I love Him.

(d) When a pronoun stands for two or more words connected by or or nor, it should be in the singular; as, Neither play nor work is injurious, if it is carefully done. But when one of the words connected by or or nor is plural, then the pronoun should be plural; as, Neither the Captain nor Crew knew their danger.

(e) When a pronoun stands for two or more words connected by and, but of different persons, it agrees with the first person in preference to the second, and with the second in preference to the third; as, John and I had our skates with us.

(f) A pronoun may stand for an infinitive mood, or part of a sentence, and in such cases should be in the neuter gender, singular number, third person; as, To contradict is rude, but it is not criminal. She is very handsome, but unfortunately knows it.

(g) The pronoun it, in the neuter gender, third person, singular number, is sometimes used indefinitely; as, It rains. It snows.

(h) Who refers to persons; Which to the lower animals, inanimate things and sometimes to infants. It formerly applied to persons; as, "Our Father which art in heaven."

(i) That is used instead of Who or Which, after a Superlative; as, It is the best book that can be got. It is similarly used after Same, all, who used interrogatively, and it used indefinitely, when these occur in sentences.

V.—SYNTAX OF THE VERB.

RULE XV.—A Verb must agree with its subject in Number and Person.

(a) The Subject answers to the question Who? or What?

(b) The Subject of a verb is always in the nominative case.

RULE XVI.—Two or more singular nouns connected by or or nor require a verb in the singular; as, Either Tom or John is going.

RULE XVII.—Two or more singular nouns that are subjects, connected by and, require their verb in the plural; as, Tom and John are going.

RULE XVIII.—Collective nouns implying unity take a singular verb; but when they imply plurality they take a plural verb; as, Parliament was dissolved. The Committee are divided.

RULE XIX.—The verb to be is often attracted to the same number as the nominative that follows it; as, "The wages of sin is death."

RULE XX.—A Transitive verb in the active voice governs its direct object in the objective case; as, I like him. They dislike her. John struck James.

(a) The Participle, which is an adjective, has the same governing power as a verb; as, seeing the rain, I staid at home. Here the participle seeing agrees with I as an adjective, and governs rain as a verb.

(b) The object of the verb may be (1) a noun; as, Jane wrote a letter. (2) A pronoun; as, We saw him. (3) A verb in the infinitive mood or an infinitive phrase; as, He tried to win the prize. Boys love to play ball. (4) A participle or participial phrase; as, Boys, stop that talking. (5) A sentence or part of a sentence; as, God said, "Let there be light." In all the above instances the objectives are used as nouns.

(c) The place of the object is usually after the verb.

(d) The Participle of an active transitive verb requires, in the active voice, an object in the objective case; as, The boy, having eaten unripe fruit, became sick.

(e) A Relative Pronoun, when in the objective case, is generally placed before the verb it governs; as, The horse which you bought is fine. Here which is the object of the verb bought (you bought which).

VI.—SYNTAX OF THE ADVERB.

RULE XXI.—Adverbs modify verbs, adjectives and other adverbs to which they relate; as, James wrote a letter hastily. A thoroughly bad man.

RULE XXII.—The Adverb ought to be placed as near as possible to the word which it modifies. We should not say "He only gave me three dollars;" but, "He gave me only three dollars," because only modifies three.

(a) Adverbs are often used indefinitely and merely to introduce a verb; as, There is no truth in you.

(b) Adverbs like yea, yes, nay, no, amen, etc., do not modify any verb.

(c) Adverbs should not be used as modifiers, where adjectives are proper; as, The flowers looked pretty, not prettily.

(d) A double use of negatives is improper; as, "I cannot by no means allow it," should read "I can by no means allow it."

(e) Adverbs are sometimes preceded by prepositions; as, At once, for ever. This form is still an adverb or adverbial phrase.

VII.—SYNTAX OF THE PREPOSITION.

RULE XXIII.—All Prepositions in the English language govern the Objective Case; as, "James wrote a letter to his father." Here to is a preposition, showing the relation between wrote and father, and governs father in the objective case.

(a) Prepositions are often followed by an adjective without the noun objective. In such cases it must be supplied in parsing; as, "Keep to the right" means "Keep to the right side."

(b) Prepositions are often omitted after certain classes of verbs, adjectives and nouns; as, "Give me a book" equals "Give to me a book." "Get me an apple" means "Get for me an apple.

(c) Double Prepositions should be regarded as one; as, "From before the altar."

(d) Special Prepositions.—Perhaps the most frequent and annoying errors in common speech and writing are those made in the use of special prepositions. The following list embraces those in which errors are most common, the preposition in italics being the correct one:

Absolve from Abhorrence for Accord with Acquit of Affinity between Adapted to (intent)
Adapted for (by nature)
Agree with (a person)
Agree to (a proposition)
Angry with Bestow upon
Change for (a thing)
Change with (a person)
Change of (apparel)
Confer on (favor)
Confer with (talk)
Confide in (trust)
Confide to (give to) Conform to Conformity with Comply with Convenient to (person)
Convenient for (purpose)
Conversant with Correspond with (one)
Correspond to (a thing)
Dependent on Derogatory to Differ from (opinion)
Differ with (person)
Different from Disappointed of (hopes)
Disappointed in (what you have) Dissent from Exception from (a rule)
Exception to (statement)
Followed by Glad of (possession)
Glad at (the news)
Independent of Involve in Martyr for (a cause)
Martyr to (disease)
Necessity for Need of (bread)
Need for (a thing)
Part from (one)
Part with (a thing)
Profit by Reconcile to (a person)
Reconcile with (statement)
Taste of (food)
Taste for (reading)
Thirst for (water)
Thirst for or after (knowledge)

The tendency to use needless prepositions should be studiously corrected; as, "In what place was he found in?" for "In what place was he found?" "Where am I at?" for "Where am I?"

VIII.—SYNTAX OF THE CONJUNCTION.

RULE XXIV.—A Conjunction connects the Words, Sentences, Phrases and Clauses between which it stands.

(a) The words connected by conjunctions must be of the same class; that is, nouns with nouns, pronouns with pronouns, adjectives with adjectives, verbs with verbs, adverbs with adverbs, etc.; as, "James and John are brothers." "We saw him and her."

(b) In connecting words and clauses by means of two conjunctions, the conjunctions must correspond to each other; as, "It is neither hot nor cold."

(c) It is plain that the Conjunction and must make two singulars equal to a plural; as, "He and I are of the same age."

(d) When corresponding Conjunctions are used, let it be remembered that so and as require an as after them; though requires yet; whether, or; either, or; neither, nor; nor, nor; or, or. Example:

"Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull."

(e) Certain adjectives also require special Conjunctions after them. Such (adj.) requires as after it; both (adj.) requires and; as, "Would I describe a preacher such as Paul."

(f) The Conjunction that is often omitted; as, "Yet Brutus says he was ambitious!" Here that is omitted before he.

IX.—THE SYNTAX OF THE INTERJECTION.

RULE XXV.—An Interjection has no dependence on any other word. In parsing, all that is necessary is to tell what part of speech it is.

X.—ANALYSIS.

Analysis is the process of taking a sentence to pieces, and accounting for each piece.

(1) A Sentence is a number of words put together so as to make complete sense; as, "The horse gallops." "Man is mortal."

A sentence may consist of a single word; as, "Strike;" "Depart."

(2) Every sentence must consist of at least two parts. These two parts are the thing we speak about and what we say of the thing.

(a) The Subject is what we speak about. "Jane loves." Here Jane is the Subject.

(b) The Predicate is what we say of the subject. "Jane loves." Here loves is the Predicate.

(c) Sometimes the Subject is not expressed, but is understood; as, "Go!" equal to "Go you!"

(d) The Grammatical Subject is simply the noun or pronoun which is the subject of the sentence; as, "Man lives." Man is the Grammatical subject.

(e) The Logical Subject includes all the attendant words which serve to modify the subject; as, "The good old man still lives." Here The good old man is the Logical subject.

(3) A Simple Subject is a single noun or pronoun, the subject of a verb. with no modifying word or words; as, "William plowed the field." "He wrote a letter."

(4) A Complex Subject is one in which the noun or pronoun which is the subject of the verb is accompanied by some modifying word or words; as, "The bad boy, afraid of a whipping, staid away from school." Here all the words in italics limit or modify the subject boy, and make it Complex.

(5) The single words, phrases and clauses which make a subject complex are called Adjuncts of the subject.

(6) The ways in which Adjuncts modify the subject are as follows:

(a) By an article; as, "The boy ran away."

(b) By an adjective; as, "Great men are few."

(c) By a noun or pronoun in apposition; as, "George Washington, President, is dead." "Jane herself came home."

(d) By a noun or pronoun in the possessive case; as, "John's coat is warm."

(e) By a participle; as, "Men fighting are a sad sight."

(f) By a verb in the infinite mood; as, "The time to study is now here."

(g) By a prepositional phrase; as, "The opportunity of the hour should not be lost."

(h) By a participial phrase; as, "The wind, blowing a hurricane, did much damage."

(i) By a clause; as, "The hope that he might be pardoned sustained him."

(j) Nouns, adjectives, adverbs, participles and infinitives which go to form Adjuncts may themselves be modified by other adjuncts.

(7) Compound Subjects are those which consist of two or more subjects, simple or complex, connected by one or more conjunctions; as, "Men and women are human beings." Here are really two sentences, "Men are human beings." "Women are human beings."

(8) Of the Predicate.—Predicates, like Subjects, are Grammatical and Logical.

(a) The Grammatical Predicate is simply the finite verb to which the noun or pronoun forming the grammatical subject is nominative; as, "The boy runs." Runs is the Grammatical Predicate.

(b) The Logical Predicate is the verb of which the noun or pronoun is the subject, together with all the words which may modify the verb; as, "John has finally reached home in safety." Here the words in italics modify has reached, and constitute the Logical Predicate.

(c) The Simple Predicate is a single finite verb having a noun or pronoun for its subject; as, "The water has frozen."

(d) A Complex Predicate is one in which the meaning of the verb is modified by some accompanying word or words; as, "Men will strive to be as rich as they can." Here the predicate will strive is rendered complex by the accompanying words in italics.

(e) Predicates, like Subjects, are rendered complex by three kinds of adjuncts, Single Words, Phrases and Clauses; as, "John walks slowly." "John walked to his home in great haste." "John walked to his home which was in the valley."

(f) The Adjuncts which modify Predicates may themselves be modified by other adjuncts.

(g) A Compound Predicate consists of two or more predicates, simple or complex, united by one or more conjunctions; as, "John loves and reverences God;" that is. "John loves God, John reverences God."

XI.—ANALYSIS OF SENTENCES.

(1) A Simple Sentence is a sentence which consists of one subject and one predicate. Both the subject and predicate may be accompanied by modifying words or phrases, and yet the sentence remain simple. "John struck James." "John in a fit of anger struck James a hard blow." Both of these are simple sentences.

(2) But when a Clause modifies the subject or predicate, the sentence is no longer simple, but Complex; as, "A life which is spent in doing good cannot be a failure." Here the words in italics constitute a Clause, and render the sentence complex.

(3) When two or more sentences are connected by a conjunction they constitute a Compound Sentence; as, "John went into the woods, and shot two squirrels." Here John is the subject of both went and shot.

(4) As to their form or use, sentences are of three kinds: Assertive or Declarative, Interrogative and Imperative.

(a) An Assertive or Declarative Sentence simply asserts or denies; as, "The night grows cold." "I am not going."

(b) An Interrogative Sentence asks a question; as, "Whom do you seek?"

(c) An Imperative Sentence always contains a verb in the imperative mood; as, "Look to your manners." In imperative sentences the subject is usually omitted, as in the above example.

(5) A Phrase is a series of words connected in meaning, but without a predicate, and not making complete sense by themselves; as, "December, the month of snows, has come." "The reason for his failure was recklessness." "The King being dead, his son succeeded."

(6) A Clause of a sentence contains a verb and its subject, making complete sense; yet it is not independent, being used to modify some other part or parts of a sentence of which it is a part; as, "The boy who is studious will learn." "He staid at home until it ceased raining."

(7) The parts of a sentence united by a conjunction to form a compound sentence are called the Members of the sentence; as, "The sun had risen, and the grass was scorched." Here are two Members united to form a compound sentence.

PROSODY.

Prosody is that part of grammar which deals with the laws and nature of verse.

(1) English verse is made up of lines; each line of verse contains a fixed number of accents; each accent has a fixed number of unaccented syllables attached to it.

Who loves' | not more' | the night' | of June'
Than dull' | Decem' | ber's gloom' | of noon'?

(2) One accented syllable with one or two unaccented, taken together, is called a foot. A foot is the unit of metre.

(3) An Iambus is one accented syllable preceded by one unaccented; as, Perhaps'; compel'; career'.

(4) A Trochee is one accented syllable followed by one unaccented; as, Gent'le; la'dy; ra'ven.

(5) An Anapest is one accented syllable preceded by two unaccented; as, Serenade'; disappear'.

(6) A Dactyl is one accented syllable followed by two unaccented; as, Hap'pily; mer'rily.

(7) An Amphibrach is an accented syllable with one unaccented on each side of it; as, Despair'ing; al-might'y.

(8) A verse made up of iambuses is called Iambic Verse; of trochees, Trochaic; of anapests, Anapestic; of dactyls, Dactylic.

(9) A verse of three feet is called Trimeter; of four feet, Tetrameter; of five feet, Pentameter; of six feet, Hexameter.

(10) Rhymed Iambic Pentameter is called Heroic verse; when unrhymed it is called Blank verse.

(11) Iambic Trimeter consists of three iambuses.

The king' | was on' | his throne';
His sa' | traps thronged' | the hall'.

(12) Iambic Tetrameter consists of four iambuses.

The fire' | with well' | dried logs' | supplied'.

(13) Iambic Pentameter consists of five iambuses.

True wit' | in na' | ture to' | advan' | tage dressed'.

(14) Iambic Hexameter consists of six iambuses.

Upon' | the mid' | lands now' | the indus' | trious muse' | doth fall'.

(15) The above pretends to be hexameter, but it is really two trimeter verses printed in one long line, and is very monotonous.

(16) Trochaic Tetrameter consists of four trochees.

When' the | heath' en | trump' et | 's clang.

(17) Trochaic Octometer consists of eight trochees.

Com' rades | leave' me | here' a | lit' tle, | while' as | yet' 'tis | ear' ly | morn'.

(18) Anapestic Tetrameter consists of four anapests.

And the clan' | has a name' | that is name' | less by day'.

(19) Dactylic Dimeter consists of two dactyls.

Can' non to | right' of them,
Can' non to | left' of them.

(20) Dactylic Tetrameter consists of four dactyls.

High'est and | best' are the | sons' of the | morn' ing.

Here the last foot is a trochee, which is allowable.

(21) Amphibrachic Tetrameter consists of four amphibrachs.

There came' to | the breach' a | poor ex' ile | of E'rin.

(22) A verse with a syllable over and above the number of feet of which it consists is called Hypermetrical.

Day af | ter day, | day af | ter day
We stuck; | nor breath | nor mo | tion, (hyper.)
As i | dle as | a paint | ed ship |
Upon | a paint | ed o | cean. (hyper.)

(23) A verse with a syllable wanting to the number of feet of which it consists is said to be Defective.

Slaug' tered | down' by | heath' en | blade. (defective.)

(24) Rhyme is a correspondence in sound at the ends of lines of poetry. Rhyme, to be good, must satisfy four conditions. These are:

(a) The rhyming syllable must be accented. Thus ring rhymes with sing; but not with think'ing.

(b) The vowel must be the same, to the ear, at least, though not necessarily to the eye. Thus lose and close are good rhymes.

(c) The final consonant must be the same; as, clang, rang. But mix rhymes with tricks, because $x = ks$.

(d) The preceding consonant must be different; as, Beat, feet; jump, pump.

(25) The Rhythm, or musical flow of verse, depends on the varied succession of phrases of different lengths, but most of all upon the Cesura, which is the rest, halt, break or pause in a line for the voice in reading aloud. It is found in both short and long lines.

More pleased that | | in a barbarous age
He gave rude Scotland | | Virgil's page.
Now, Lycidas, | | the shepherds weep no more;
Henceforth | | thou are the genius of the shore.

(26) The Stanza is a group of rhymed lines.

(a) A Couplet is a stanza of two rhymed lines.

(b) A Triplet is a stanza of three rhymed lines.

(c) A Quartrain is a stanza of four rhymed lines, of which the first (sometimes) rhymes with the third, and the second always with the fourth.

(d) A Sextant is a stanza of six lines, with the second, fourth and sixth lines rhyming. But the arrangement of rhyming lines may vary.

(e) An Octave, or Ottava, is a stanza of eight lines, with a varying arrangement of rhyming lines.

(f) The Spenserian stanza, so called because Spenser first used it in his "Faerie Queen," is a stanza of nine lines.

(g) A Sonnet is a short poem of fourteen lines, with the rhymes arranged in a peculiar way. The first eight lines of a sonnet are called its octave, and the last six, its sestette.

ENGLISH COMPOSITION;

OR, THE TURNING OF WORDS INTO SENTENCES.

PART I. LANGUAGE.

LESSON 1.

1. Language is the means of expressing thought by words; it is both oral and written.

2. Oral Language expresses thought by combinations of sounds, called words.

3. Written Language expresses thought by means of combination of characters or letters that stand for words.

LESSON 2.

THE SENTENCES.

4. A Sentence is a thought expressed in words, either spoken or written.

5. A sentence in its simplest form is the statement of a single fact, thus: Dogs bark. The man walks. Each of these sentences contains two parts.

6. Say something about the wind. The wind blows.

7. Make a statement about The wind blows.

8. Express a thought about the wind. The wind blows.

9. Make a sentence about the wind. The wind blows.

10. In the sentence, The wind blows, wind is the subject, because it is the thing about which something has been said.

11. Say something about a thing that blows. The wind blows.

12. Make a statement about something that blows. The wind blows.

13. Express a thought about something that blows. The wind blows.

14. Make a sentence about something that blows. The wind blows.

15. In the sentence, "The wind blows," blows is the predicate, because it is that which is said of the subject.

16. Every sentence contains a thought.

17. Every sentence must have a subject and a predicate.

18. The subject is that which something is said about.

19. The predicate is that which says something about the subject.

LESSON 3.

THE SENTENCE.

20. A simple statement is called a proposition.

21. Every proposition contains a subject and a predicate.

22. A sentence may consist of a single proposition or a combination of propositions. Thus: The wind blew. This is a simple proposition. The wind blew and the rain fell. This sentence is a combination of two propositions.

23. A clause is one of two or more united propositions. As, When the signal was given, the gate was opened and the horses rushed across the field. This sentence is composed of three clauses: (1) When the signal was given, (2) the gate was opened, (3) the horses rushed across the field.

The subject of the first clause is signal, the predicate rushed.

A phrase is a combination of words; but, unlike the clause, it has no subject or predicate; as. In the spring; on the hill; between the rocks.

LESSON 4.

THE SENTENCE—NOUN AND VERB.

24. A noun is a word used as a name of some object or quality; as, Charles, cow, chair, goodness.

A noun is a part of speech.

25. The subject of a sentence or a clause always contains a noun or something used as a noun. It is that about which something is said.

26. A verb is a word that denotes some action, state or being; as, walk, ride, is living. A verb is a part of speech.

27. The predicate of a sentence or of a clause always contains a verb. It is that which says something about the subject.

28. In the sentence, "The black dog ran swiftly," dog is a noun and is the subject; ran is the verb and is the predicate.

LESSON 5.

THE PRINCIPAL ELEMENTS OF A SENTENCE.

29. The principal elements of a sentence or a clause are the subject and predicate. Hence the principal elements of a sentence or a clause are nouns and verbs.

30. The subject is simple when the affirmation made by the predicate is concerning only one thing; as. Snow melts.

31. The subject is compound when the affirmation is made concerning more than one thing; as, Snow and Ice melt.

32. The predicate of a proposition or clause is either simple or compound.

33. The predicate is simple when but one affirmative is made; as, The lambs run.

34. The predicate is compound when more than one affirmation is made; as, The lambs run and skip.

35. The subject and predicate may both be compound; as, Boys and girls work and play.

LESSON 6.

MODIFYING ELEMENTS.

36. The modifying elements are adjective elements, adverbial elements, objective elements, connective elements and independent elements.

37. Adjective Elements.—Words that modify a noun or anything that is used instead of a noun are called adjectives; as the black dog; the swift horse; five cows. The, black, swift and five are adjectives.

An adjective is a part of speech. Adjectives are called adjective elements. Phrases and clauses, used like adjectives, are called adjective elements; as, "Star of the summer night." Of the summer night is a phrase. It is used like an adjective to modify star. Hence it is an adjective element. "The star that set too early." That set too early is a clause used like an adjective to modify star. Hence it is an adjective element.

38. Adverbial Elements.—A word used to modify a verb or an adjective is called an adverb. "The horse ran swiftly." Swiftly modifies the verb ran. Hence it is an adverb.

(a) "A very tall man passed by." Very modifies the adjective tall. Hence it is an adverb.

(b) Words that modify adverbs are called adverbs; as, "The horse ran very swiftly." Very modifies the adverb swiftly. Hence it is an adverb. The adverb is a part of speech.

(c) Adverbs and phrases and clauses used like adverbs are called adverbial elements; as, "He walks in the dark." In the dark is a phrase modifying the verb walks. Hence it is used like an adverb and is an adverbial element.

"The dog barks when he sees a tramp." The clause when he sees a tramp modifies the verb barks, like an adverb. Hence it is an adverbial element.

39. Connective Elements. — Words that connect other words are called conjunctions; as, Dogs and cats are animals." The word and connects the word dogs with cats.

40. Conjunctive Adverbs.—Some adverbs perform the double office of modifying some word and connecting two clauses; as, "He saw the boat when it passed under the bridge." When connects the principal clause, He saw the boat, and the subordinate clause, it passed under the bridge. It also modifies the verb passed. When is a conjunctive adverb.

41. Prepositions.—Words that join other words and show relation between them are called prepositions. The preposition is a part of speech; as, "The boy sat on his sled." The word on connects the words sat and sled and shows the relation between them. It forms with sled the adverbial phrase on his sled.

42. Objective Elements.—Words used to complete the meaning of verbs and prepositions are called objects. Hence objective elements; as, "The dog bit the boy." The word boy completes the meaning of the verb bit and is said to be the object of the verb bit. "The boy sat on his sled." The word sled completes the meaning of on and is said to be the object of the preposition on.

The objects of verbs and prepositions are called objective elements.

43. Independent Elements.—Words used to express some strong or sudden emotion are called interjections; as, "Ah! that is the trouble." The interjection is a part of speech.

Nouns and words, used independently, and interjections are called independent elements; as, "Friend, you are unwise."

Phrases and clauses, used like interjections, are independent elements; as, "Of all things, I never said so." "Oh! that we were wise."

44. Attributive Elements. — Words, phrases and clauses used in the predicate, but relating to the subject, are called attributes; as, "The boy is good." "He is of strong mind." "My judgment is that you will succeed."

45. The Copula.—The verb be and its forms, am, is, was, are, were, been, etc., are usually used to connect the subject to its attribute; as, "John is good." "He was a strong man." Is connects John with its attribute good. Was connects he with its attribute man.

LESSON 7.

CLASSIFICATION OF SENTENCES.

46. Sentences are divided, with respect to use, into four classes: declarative, interrogative, imperative and exclamatory.

47. A declarative sentence is used to affirm or to deny; as, "Birds fly."

48. An interrogative sentence is used to ask a question; as, "What is the matter?"

49. An imperative sentence is used to express a command, entreaty or request; as, "Lend me your book."

50. An exclamatory sentence is used in exclamation or to express strong emotion; as, "Alas! I shall perish."

51. Sentences are divided, with respect to form, into three classes: simple, complex and compound.

52. A simple sentence consists of but one proposition; as, "Stars shine." "Who comes here?" "Move slowly."

53. Propositions are either principal or subordinate, and are usually called clauses.

54. A principal clause is one which makes complete sense when standing alone.

55. A subordinate clause is one which must be connected with another clause to make complete sense; as, "The man that does no good does harm."

NOTE.—In this sentence, "The man does harm" is the principal proposition, for it makes complete sense when standing alone. "That does no good" is the subordinate proposition, for it does not make complete sense unless connected with the other proposition. It modifies man.

56. A complex sentence consists of a principal clause, with either itself, or some part of itself, modified by a subordinate clause, used as an element; as, "Leaves fall when autumn comes." "He who is diligent will win the race." "I hear that you have bought a fine residence."

57. A compound sentence consists of two or more propositions joined by coördinate connectives; as, "Summer comes and fruit ripens." "I go, but I return."

NOTES.—I. Propositions or clauses composing compound sentences are called members.

II. The propositions composing compound or complex sentences may themselves be compound or complex.

III. Relative pronouns, subordinate conjunctions and conjunctive adverbs are used to connect the dependent clauses of complex sentences to the principal clause, and to each other when they themselves are complex.

IV. Sometimes the connectives are omitted; as, Talent is power, tact is skill."

58. A prepositional phrase is one which is introduced by a preposition; as, "Of a truth." It is frequently called an adjunct.

59. A complex phrase is one that contains a phrase or a clause, as a modifying adjunct of its principal part; as, "In the varieties of life." Of life is an adjunct or phrase modifying varieties.

60. A compound phrase is one composed of two or more coördinate phrases; as, "Stooping down and looking in." "Over the bridge and around the bridge."

61. An infinitive phrase is one, the principal part of which is a verb, and is usually preceded by to; as, "To do good." The participle is a form of the verb, used like an adjective; as, "The knife taken from the table was Jackson's." Taken modifies knife like an adjective and is made from the verb take.

62. A participial phrase is one, the principal part of which is a participle; as, "A measure founded on justice."

NOTE.—A phrase may be used as a subject, object or attribute, or it may be an adverbial or an adjective modifier, or it may be independent.

"To achieve success was his aim," phrase used as subject. "I like to study arithmetic," phrase used as object. "To miss the concert was to lose a great pleasure," phrase used as attribute. "Imagine a palace of ivory and pearl," phrase used as adjective modifier. "The old soldiers fought with bravery," phrase used as adverbial modifier. "To speak plainly, he is your best friend," independent phrase.

LESSON 8.

ANALYSIS OF SENTENCES.

63. The analysis of a sentence is the separation of it into its parts or elements.

EXAMPLE 1.—Grant met Lee.

Explanation.—This is a sentence; declarative, simple (why?). Grant is the subject; met is the predicate verb and is modified by Lee, an objective element.

64. EXAMPLE 2.—What did you see?

This is a sentence; declarative, simple (why?). You is the subject; did see is the predicate verb (why?). The predicate verb is modified by what, an objective element.

65. EXAMPLE 3.—Bring me water.

This is a sentence; imperative (why?). Thou or you understood is the subject; bring is the predicate verb (why?). The predicate verb is modified by water, a direct objective element, and by me, an indirect objective element.

66. EXAMPLE 4.—They have chosen John clerk.

This is a sentence; declarative, simple (why?). They is the subject; have chosen is the predicate verb (why?). The predicate verb is modified by John, an objective element, and John is modified by clerk, an adjective element denoting office.

67. EXAMPLE 5.—The boat glides smoothly.

This is a sentence; declarative, simple (why?). Boat is the subject nominative; glides is the predicate verb. The subject nominative is modified by the, an adjective element; the predicate verb is modified by smoothly, an adverbial element.

68. EXAMPLE 6.—William is strictly honest.

This is a sentence; declarative, simple (why?). William is the subject; is is the predicate verb (or copula); honest is the attribute (why?). The attribute is modified by strictly, an adverbial element.

69. EXAMPLE 7.—Large rocks are plenty.

This is a sentence; declarative, simple. Rocks is the subject nominative; are plenty is the predicate verb (why?). The subject nominative is modified by large, an adjective element. Are is the copula (why?). Plenty is the attribute.

70. EXAMPLE 8.—The dog broke the boy's arm.

Dog is the subject nominative, modified by the, an adjective element. Broke, the predicate verb, is modified by arm, an objective element. Arm is modified by boy's, an adjective element. Boy's arm is modified by the, an adjective element. (Some may regard the as a modifier of arm.)

I. Compound Subjects.—1. He and I went to London.

II. Compound Predicates.—1. The bank clerk wrote the draft and handed it to the cashier for signature.

III. Compound Objective Elements.—1. He had a good mind, a sound judgment and a lively imagination.

IV. Compound Adjective Elements.—1. He was a good, faithful and generous man.

V. Compound Adverbial Elements.—1. "Man is fearfully and wonderfully made."

The following are the principal rules for the use of capital letters:

71. Begin with a capital—

The first word of every sentence.

The first word of every line of poetry.

The first word of a quotation, maxim or question introduced in the direct form; as, Emerson says "Trust thyself."

The first word of each statement in a series, when formally enumerated; as, The essay will be marked on the following things: 1. Thought; 2. Composition; 3. Conciseness; 4. Neatness.

72. Also begin with capitals proper nouns or words directly derived from proper nouns; as, Emerson, Cape of Good Hope, Monroe Doctrine.

73. Names applied to Deity, and usually pronouns referring to God; as, Jehovah—The Eternal Goodness.

74. Names of months, days of the week and holidays; as, January, Sunday.

75. Every important word in the title of a book, essay, poem, etc.; as, The Forest Hymn.

76. The name of an important event in history or of an epoch of time; as, The Rebellion; The War of the Roses.

77. Titles of office or honor when applied to particular persons or used in connection with proper names; as, Lord Byron, Chief Justice Marshall, Uncle John.

78. The name of a religious sect or a political party; as, Methodists, The Tories.

79. Common nouns, strongly personified; as, O Life! how pleasant is thy morning.

80. Any point of the compass when it denotes a section of the country; as, They went from the East to the South.

The words I and O should always be capitals

PART II. SYNTAX.

Many of the laws of Syntax have been illustrated, but a more general treatment will now follow.

1. A sentence is a thought expressed in words, and it may be oral or written.

2. A thought may be expressed as a statement, a question, a command or an exclamation.

In whatever form the sentence is expressed, it must contain a subject and a predicate; yet either the subject or the predicate may be understood.

SIMPLE SENTENCE.

3. A simple sentence contains but one subject and one predicate.

4. The subject of a sentence is the word or words that name the thing about which an assertion is made.

5. The predicate of a sentence is the word or words that assert something about the subject.

6. The simple sentence may have for its subject simply a noun or an equivalent, and for its predicate a finite verb.

7. Both subject and predicate of a simple sentence may be modified to any degree, provided that no modifying element is a clause. Thus: Early in the morning of a beautiful spring day the rising sun, breaking through the dark foliage, fell beautifully upon the green lawn sloping gently to the south.

8. The modifying elements of the simple sentence are words and phrases.

COMPLEX SENTENCES.

9. The complex sentence differs from the simple sentence in that it has one or more clauses used as modifying elements. Thus: When the spring comes the birds sing. The birds sing is the principal thought and makes complete sense when standing alone. It, therefore, is the principal or independent clause.

When the spring comes does not make complete sense when standing alone, and therefore is called the subordinate clause.

10. A complex sentence must contain a principal clause and one or more subordinate clauses, used as modifying elements or as a substantive.

CLASSIFICATION OF CLAUSES.

11. The adjective clause is a clause used like an adjective. The following sentences compare the use of adjective clauses to the use of adjectives.

SIMPLE SENTENCES WITH ADJECTIVES OR ADJECTIVE PHRASES.

A friend in need is a friend indeed.
A sleepy dog never barks.
An honest man is a good citizen.

COMPLEX SENTENCES WITH ADJECTIVE CLAUSES.

A friend who helps in time of need is a friend indeed.
The dog that sleeps never barks.
The man who is honest is a good citizen.

Most adjective clauses are relative clauses; that is, clauses introduced either by relative pronouns or by relative adverbs of place or time:

The squirrel which the boy had tamed escaped.
The dog that worried the cat lived in Jack's house.
The place where man died for man is holy ground.
The time when this happens will be a day of sorrow.

12. The noun modified by a clause introduced by a relative pronoun is always the antecedent of the pronoun.

ADVERBIAL CLAUSES.

13. The following sentences will illustrate the use of the adverb or adverbial phrase and the adverbial clause.

SIMPLE SENTENCES WITH ADVERBS OR ADVERBIAL PHRASES.

He started at sunrise.
In his boyhood he was truthful.

COMPLEX SENTENCES WITH ADVERBIAL CLAUSES.

He started when the sun had risen.
When he was a boy he was truthful.

14. Subordinate clauses used as adverbial modifiers are called adverbial clauses.

15. Adverbial clauses may be introduced by adverbs of place, time or manner; as, where, whether, whence, while, when, after, before, how, as, until.

16. Adverbial clauses are often introduced by the subordinate conjunctions although, because, though, if, that, in order that, so that.

17. Adverbial clauses may modify verbs, adjectives and adverbs.

NOUN CLAUSES.

18. Subordinate clauses may be used as a noun or substantive.

Compare the two sentences:

Success is certain.
That we shall succeed is certain.

The two sentences express the same thing. In the first sentence the noun success is the subject.

In the second the clause that we shall succeed is used instead of the noun success. This clause is now the subject of the sentence.

19. The following sentences will illustrate the use of the noun clause:

How he succeeds is still a mystery. (Noun clause as subject.)
Tell me what you intend to do. (Noun clause as object of the verb tell.)
I am sincere in what I profess. (Noun clause as object of the preposition in.)
Dreams are not what they seem. (Noun clause as predicate of the subject dreams.)
The belief, that the boy was dead, prevailed. (Noun clause in apposition with belief.)

20. There are three kinds of clauses, the noun clause, the adjective clause and the adverbial clause.

21. The complex sentence always contains a principal clause and one or more subordinate clauses.

COMPOUND SENTENCES.

22. The compound sentence must have at least two principal statements which, when standing alone, would make complete simple sentences. Thus:

The wind blew and the rain fell.

Either of the two clauses, The wind blew or the rain fell, would make complete sense when standing alone.

23. Such clauses are called coördinate clauses and are connected by coördinate conjunctions, either expressed or understood.

24. The parts of compound sentences connected by coördinate conjunctions are called members.

25. The members of a compound sentence may be all like simple sentences, all like complex sentences or part like simple and part like complex sentences. Thus:

We are born into life—it is sweet, it is strange!
We lie on the knee of wild mystery, which smiles with a change.

26. The simple grammatical subject of a sentence, either simple, complex or compound, is a noun or an equivalent, unmodified. As subject of a sentence there are several equivalents for the noun; as,

The car has arrived. Car is a noun.
We are going. We is a pronoun.
Some are honest. Some is an adjective.
To labor is worthy. To labor is an infinitive phrase.
That he was kind is admitted. That he was kind is a clause.

27. To parse a noun, state class, person, number, gender, case and reason for case.

28. A noun or pronoun used as the subject of a finite verb is in the nominative case.

29. In parsing an adjective, a phrase or a clause used as a subject, simply state that it is used as a noun and is the subject.

30. The subject may be modified in various ways; as,
The wild waves beat upon the shore. (Adjective.)
The hum of bees was heard. (Prepositional phrase.)

Henry's father came home. (Noun in the possessive case.)

My ball is lost. (Pronoun in possessive case.)

Longfellow, the author, wrote poems. (Noun in apposition.)

A desire to know brings knowledge. (Verb in the infinitive mood.)

Broken are the ties that bound us. (Clause.)

The barking dog never bites. (Participle.)

31. All words, phrases or clauses used to modify the subject of a sentence have the force of adjectives.

THE PREDICATE.

32. The verb is the part of speech used in making an assertion, and so must be contained in the predicate of a sentence.

33. The predicate of a simple sentence may be:

A verb; as, The bee works.

A verb and its complement; as, The boys love him.

34. The complement of a verb is that which completes its meaning.

35. Verbs of incomplete predication require a complement.

36. The complement of a transitive verb may be:

a. The man may reach home. Home is a noun.

b. The boys love him. Him is a pronoun.

c. He loves walking on the green. Walking on the green is a phrase.

d. He sees where you have gone. Where you have gone is a clause.

37. The complement of an intransitive verb may be:

a. That man is governor. Governor is a noun.

b. It was she. She is a pronoun.

c. The crystal spar is brilliant. Brilliant is an adjective.

d. The room seems to gather dampness. To gather dampness is a phrase.

e. The hat seems what I want. What I want is a clause.

f. I am here. Here is an adverb.

38. The predicate of a sentence may be modified by:

An adverb; The rain fell slowly.

An adverbial phrase; The rain fell on the roof. He tried to win.

A clause; Walk where the road is dry. The boy studies that he may succeed.

39. It must be kept in mind that the sentence has two distinct parts: The subject element and the predicate element.

40. It will be observed that the modifiers of the subject elements are of the nature of adjectives, and are called adjective elements; while those of the predicate are called adverbial elements.

This division of the sentence will aid in understanding complicated sentences.

THE FORMS OF THE SENTENCES.

41. The declarative sentence is the most direct form of statement. It declares or asserts something as a fact; as,

The Lambs play.

The happy lambs play on the hill side.

When the lambs play on the hill side they are happy.

The lambs play on the hill side, and the sheep feed in the vale below.

All of the above sentences are declarative, because they state facts.

INTERROGATIVE SENTENCES.

42. The modes of thought are not always for telling, declaring or asserting. The mode may be for questioning, ordering or exclaiming.

We will observe that the following sentences,

Who leads his class?

Have those men a soul?

do not assert, but, on the contrary, they make inquiries; they are questions.

When the mode of thought makes a sentence that asks a question it is called an interrogative sentence. A sentence that asks a question is called an Interrogative Sentence.

43. The simple subject of the interrogative sentence often follows the predicate verb. Thus,

Is Henry your son? Henry is your son.

Know you the law? You know the law.

Observe the difference in the order when the sentences are changed to the declarative form.

44. The predicate of an interrogative sentence is often a verb phrase commencing with do, does, did. In this case the subject comes between the two parts of the verb phrase. Thus,

Do you blame the child?

Does the boy go to school?

Did they find the book?

45. Interrogative sentences often begin with the pronouns who, whose, whom, which and what.

Who is reading? Which one is gone?

Whom did you see? What pleases you?

Pronouns thus used are called interrogative pronouns.

The interrogative sentence may be simple, complex or compound. Thus,

Did it ever seem possible that we should meet with poverty?

Did you see that the man was frightened, and that the boy was not?

IMPERATIVE SENTENCES.

46. Each of the following groups of words expresses a command:

Open the window. Pass the apples to John, please.

We observe the following peculiarities in these expressions:

1. There is a verb in each: open, pass.

2. No subject is stated, yet the speaker must have had some one in mind, namely, the person to whom he was speaking.

47. The subject may be expressed by prefixing to the verb the pronoun you. Thus:

[You] open the window. [You] pass the apples to John, please.

These expressions are peculiar kinds of sentences, with predicate expressed and the subject you understood.

Such sentences are called imperative sentences.

An Imperative Sentence expresses a command or a request. The subject is usually omitted, but when expressed it is either thou or you.

EXCLAMATORY SENTENCES.

48. A sentence of any form may be uttered as a kind of a cry expressing some strong emotion. Thus:

He lives! What do you say? Stay here!

These sentences are called exclamatory sentences, yet they are of different kinds. The first is declarative; the second, interrogative; the third, imperative.

Exclamations are expressed in the following peculiar sentences:

What a smart boy! How quickly the flower fades!

While these sentences do exclaim, they are essentially declarative sentences.

49. Any sentence that expresses surprise, grief, or any strong emotion in the form of an exclamation may be called an exclamatory sentence.

50. The exclamation is denoted by the exclamation point (!) terminating the sentence, if it is declarative or imperative.

FORM OF ANALYSIS.

51. In analyzing a simple sentence the following order may be observed:

(1) Carefully read the sentence; (2) divide the sentence into the complete subject and the complete predicate; (3) mention the simple subject and the simple predicate; (4) mention and describe each of the modifiers of the subject and of the predicate; (5) mention the complementary elements, and state whether they are predicate nominative, predicate adjective, or object; (6) finally, point out as independent elements all the interjections and vocatives.

52. In analyzing a compound sentence: (1) divide the sentence into its clauses, and point out the conjunctions that connect them; (2) analyze each clause as if it were a simple sentence.

53. In analyzing a complex sentence: (1) divide the sentence into its clauses; (2) point out the principal clause and the subordinate clauses; (3) analyze the principal clause, mentioning the subordinate clauses in their proper places as modifiers or as substantives; (4) analyze the subordinate clause.

54. If the sentence is compound, with complex members, analyze each complex member as a complex sentence.

FORMS OF DISCOURSE.

55. Prose and poetry are the two general divisions of discourse.

56. Poetry is a metrical form of discourse, of which there are many varieties. The divisions of discourse written in poetry are the canto, the stanza, the verse, and the sentence.

57. The forms of discourse are narration, description, exposition, argumentation and persuasion.

58. The divisions of discourse written in prose are the chapter, the paragraph and the sentence.

59. The sentence in poetry is the same as it is in prose, excepting that it is frequently transposed and is usually more involved.

60. The paragraph is a division in prose discourse next longer than the sentence. It corresponds to the stanza in poetry.

61. Every long discourse is divided into paragraphs.

62. A paragraph has unity.

A paragraph may be composed of one or several sentences.

Usually a short discourse of less than one page is written in one paragraph.

Style in Composition.—Every one, in writing or speaking, makes sentences, but these sentences may be neat or they may be clumsy—pleasant to hear or read, dull and heavy. The manner in which we put our sentences together is called style. That style may be good or bad, feeble or vigorous, clear or obscure. It is by study of style that we are enabled to give clear, forcible and graceful expression to our thoughts. Three important elements enter into good composition:

1. Clear thinking.
2. Reading the best writers.
3. Frequent practise in writing, and the careful correcting and polishing of what is written.

But though reading and practise are the chief means of acquiring a good style, there are many excellent general and special directions which will prove helpful to beginners. We submit a few which Professor Meikeljohn has prepared and used in his work on the English Language:—

The Subject.—"We must know the subject fully about which we are going to write. Draw upon a piece of paper a short skeleton of what you are going to write about. But such an outline should not be allowed to fetter the writer, if, in the course of actual composition, he finds any reason for deviating from his original plan. Says Cobbett, 'Sit down to write what you have thought, and not to think what you shall write.'"

Pure English.—"Do not use obsolete or old-fashioned words, such as erst, peradventure, holden, vouchsafe, methinks, etc. Avoid slang expressions, such as awfully, jolly, dandy, rot, bosh, smell a rat, see with half an eye, etc. Avoid the use of foreign words and phrase, such as confrere, raison-d'être, amour propre, congé, etc. As between words of the same meaning of Latin and Saxon origin always choose the latter. Get the right word in the right place. 'The veracity of the statement was questioned.' Here veracity is not the right word, as it applies to a person. The right word is accuracy. A good way to acquire accurate English is to make a collection of synonyms and carefully compare their meanings. A Roman writer says, 'Care should be taken, not that the reader may understand if he will, but that he shall understand whether he will or not.' Simplicity is a fine art in composition. It teaches us to avoid too learned words, and roundabout ways of mentioning persons and things. As an instance, vituperation should not be used for abuse; nor commence for begin; nor initiate for commence. 'Swan of Avon' is a stale and hackneyed phrase for Shakespeare, and the 'Great Lexicographer,' for Dr. Johnson. Brevity enjoins the need of expressing meaning in as few words as possible. Pope says:

'Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,
Much fruit of sense beneath is seldom found.'

And Horace says:

'Seek not for words; seek only for clear thought;
And then the words will trooping come unsought.'"

Special Cautions.—"Avoid tautology. 'It was founded on the entire monopoly of the whole trade.' In this sentence both entire and whole are unnecessary, for monopoly means entire possession, or possession of the whole.

"Place the adverb as near the word it modifies as you can. 'He not only found her employed but pleased.' In this sentence not only belongs to employed, and should be placed immediately before it.

"Avoid circumlocution. 'The Queen, on reaching Perth, partook of breakfast,' should be writen, 'On reaching Perth, the Queen breakfasted.'

"Use of such words of exaggeration as unprecedented, most extraordinary, incalculable, awfully, stupendous, etc., should be avoided unless we know they are both true and appropriate. Be careful about the right position of each phrase or clause in your sentence. It was neglect of this caution that led the old lady to write her advertisement as follows: 'A piano for sale by a lady about to cross the Channel in an oak case with carved legs.'"

PUNCTUATION OF ENGLISH.

A very important matter in the making, writing and printing of sentences is punctuation. By this is meant the use of certain signs or points, now generally agreed upon, which serve to mark off the different parts of sentences, and to show the relation of each part to the entire sentence. Punctuation, as usually understood, is performed with four signs or points: the period, colon, semicolon and comma. But many other points, as seen below, are used in writing and printing, partly rhetorical and partly grammatical, which are convenient, and with whose form and use every writer and printer should be familiar. It was not until the sixteenth century that an approach was made to the present form of punctuation by the Manutii of Venice. With the famous Caxton printers, oblique strokes took the place of commas and periods. While now the form of punctuation marks are quite well agreed upon, their force in actual usage remains somewhat defiant of rule; but the following observations are based on a pretty generally accepted concensus.

.—The Period, or full stop, marks the close of a sentence; as, "This is the period of my ambition." It is also used to mark the end of an abbreviated word; as, inst. for instant; prox. for next; Shak. for Shakespeare.

:—Colon means limb or member. It is the point or character used to separate parts of a sentence that are complete in themselves and nearly independent; thus, it serves to introduce a new statement that may be regarded as an afterthought; as, "Study to acquire a habit of accurate expression: no study is more important." It is also used to introduce a catalogue of things; as, "Then follow excellent parables about fame: as that she gathereth," etc. Further, it introduces a formal speech; as, Mr. White rose and said: "Sir, I am sorry," etc. It often takes the place of a conjunction. It is gradually falling into disuse.

;—Semicolon is half a colon. It is the mark employed when, for reasons of sound or sense, two or more simple sentences are thrown into one; or, it indicates a separation between parts or members of a sentence more distinct than that marked by a comma; as, "In the youth of a state, arms do flourish; in the middle age of a state, learning; in the declining age of a state, mechanical arts and merchandise."—BACON.

,—Comma means clause. It is used to indicate a strong pause either of sense or sound, and it marks the smallest division of a sentence, written or printed. Besides its natural function, it serves several special purposes:—

(a) It may be used in place of and:—

"We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

(b) After an address:—"John, come here."

(c) After certain introductory adverbs; as, however, at length, at last, etc.

"He came, however, in time to catch the train."

General Rule.—Every writer should bear in mind that it is better to under-punctuate than to over-punctuate. This is especially so when it comes to the use of the comma. The old-fashioned style of punctuating the following sentence was: "There are many pauses, which we ought to make, in reading a sentence aloud, that are not really strong enough to warrant a comma." Such a profuse use of commas is not at all necessary. The sentence should be written or printed thus: "There are many pauses which we ought to make in reading a sentence aloud that are not nearly strong enough to warrant a comma."

——Dash is a mark or line in punctuation denoting a sudden break, stop or transition in a sentence, or an abrupt change in its construction, a long or significant pause, or an unexpected epigrammatic turn of sentiment. It introduces an amplification or explanation; and two dashes are now commonly employed in place of the old parentheses:

(a) "During the voyage a storm came on—such a storm as we had never seen before."

(b) "Ribbons, buckles, buttons—any trifle he had worn—were stored as priceless treasures."

?—Interrogation is inquiry, the act of questioning. The interrogation point, mark or sign, indicates that the sentence with which it is connected is a question. Its place is at the end of the question. It is also used to express a doubt, or to mark a query. It is said to have been formed from the first and last letters of the Latin quaestio, question, placed one over the other; thus, $\frac{q}{o}$

!—Exclamation, called also the point of admiration, is the mark or sign employed to denote outcry, emphatic utterance, expression of surprise or wonder. It is gradually falling into disuse. It is said to have been formed from the Latin word Io, joy, written vertically; thus, $\frac{I}{o}$

( )—Parentheses means to put in beside. It is applied to the word, phrase or sentence, by way of comment or explanation, inserted in, or attached to, a sentence which would be grammatically complete without it. It is usually enclosed in curved lines ( ), each of which is a parenthesis; both, parentheses. Dashes are fast taking the place of parentheses.

[ ]—Brackets or Crotchets are characters used in writing and printing to inclose a reference, explanation or note, or a part to be excluded from a sentence, to indicate an interpolation, rectify a mistake, supply an omission, and for other kindred purposes. The sign is often confused with that of the parenthesis.

'—Apostrophe means the turning away or omitting of a letter. If called be contracted into call'd, or never into ne'er, the place of the omitted letter is supplied by an apostrophe, or apostrophic comma. It is also a sign of the possessive case, as a boy's hat. In this use it originally marked the omission of the letter e. It finds frequent use in designating the plural of figures and letters; as, two 9's and four d's. Again, it is used in single or double form to indicate a quotation.

-—Hyphen means into one, or together. It is a short dash used to connect the parts of compound words, as in clear-headed: also at the end of written or printed lines when part of a word is carried to the next line; again, to separate the syllables of words used in spelling exercises; as, ex'cel-lent.

´—Acute accent. Acute means sharp, high, shrill. Accent, in its secondary sense, is the mark or character used in writing which serves to regulate the pronunciation, as ac'cent. There are primary and secondary accents, as in"ad-mis'sible. Here the primary, or heaviest, accent is on mis. Accent is also the mark used to indicate the quality of sound of the vowel marked.

`—Grave accent. Grave or low accent is the opposite of acute, both in significance and direction of slope. It implies the level tone, or even the negation of accent. It is used mostly to indicate the quality of sound of the vowel marked.

ˆ—Broad or circumflex accent marks a long and contracted syllable. This is Latin usage. It may be marked either ˇ or ⌢ over the letter or syllable affected.

~ or ⌢—Circumflex or Tilde, in its Greek significance, indicated a tone raised and then lowered. In Spanish, when placed over an n or l (ñ ll) it indicates that the following vowel must be sounded as if preceded by y.

¯—Long accent, or Macron (long) is the short, straight, horizontal mark placed over vowels to denote that they have the long sound; as, dāme, sēam, fīre, hōme, mūle.

ˇ or ˘—Short accent or Breve. A curved or angular mark commonly used to indicate the short quality of a vowel—ămber, ŏft, strŭck.

¨—Diæresis, placed over the second of two adjacent vowels, shows that they are to be sounded separately; as, coöperate, aërial.

¸—Cedilla means the letter zeta (Z) in Greek. It was formerly written after the letter c to give it the sound of s. Then it came to be written under the c (ç) for the same purpose, but it soon began to lose its form and became a mere arbitrary sign, retaining, however, its original significance, as in façade.

ˆ—Caret means "there is something wanting." It is a mark used by writers and proofreaders to indicate that something is interlined above, or is inserted in the margin, which belongs in the place marked by the caret.

" "—Quotation marks consist of two inverted commas placed at the beginning, and two direct commas at the end, of a passage quoted from an author in his own words. Some writers, when they quote an author, but not in exact words, use but one comma at either end, or a half quotation.

} —Brace means arms stretched out. It is the vertical curved line used to signify that two or more words or lines are to be taken together; thus, bolt } bowl }

* * *—Ellipsis signifies a leaving out, defect, omission. Ellipsis is really a figure in syntax implying the omission of one or more words from a sentence, which are obviously understood; thus, the virtue I admire, for, the virtue which I admire. Of course the sign * * * is not used here, but it comes into use to signify an omission of an unimportant part of a quotation.

. . .—Leaders serve to carry the eye across the pages of indexes, tables, contents, etc.; thus,

Needle-gun invented 1856

They are also used as signs of ellipses.

*—Asterisk means a little star. It is used in printing or writing as a reference to a passage or note in the margin or at the bottom of a page, and also to supply the omission of letters or words. It is the first used of the reference marks.

†—Dagger, or obelisk, is so called from its resemblance to a dagger, or, inverted obelisk. It is a mark of reference to a note in the margin or at the bottom of the page, and is the second mark used when more than one are used on a page.

§—Section mark is the character often used to denote a division of a writing or subdivision of a chapter; a paragraph. It is said by some to have been formed from the initial letters (ff) of the Latin words signum sectionis, meaning sign of the section; but others say it is a modification of the Greek P, initial of Paragraphos, paragraph.

||—Parallels. This character, consisting of two parallel vertical lines, is used in writing and printing to call attention to a similarly marked note in the margin or at the foot of the page.

¶—Paragraph is the sign which notes the division of a writing into distinct parts, sections or subdivisions. The writer can avoid the use of the sign by beginning the first sentence of the paragraph on a new line and at more than the usual distance from the left-hand margin. It is but a modification of the Greek P, initial of Paragraphos, paragraph.

☞—Index, or pointer, is the sign used to direct particular attention to a note or paragraph. It is sometimes called a fist.

⁂ or ⁂—Asterism is the Greek word asterismos, a cluster of stars. Like the asterisk, or single *, it is used as a sign to direct attention to a passage, especially when such attention is deemed very particular.

WRONG USES OF WORDS AND EXPRESSIONS.

Abbreviate is often used in the place of abridge; the former has the sense of curtailing, the latter of condensing. We do not abbreviate a dictionary or sermon, but abridge it.

Accept of; the of is superfluous. One accepts a thing; not accepts of a thing.

Acoustics, like many other scientific terms, is of plural form, but is used in the singular; as, acoustics is the science which treats of sound.

Adjective and adverb. When, in a sentence, the wish is to express a quality of the subject, the adjective should be used, however closely it may be situated as to the verb; on the contrary, if the wish is to express some quality of the action of the verb, the adverb should be used.

Admit, admit of. The first (admit) permits one to enter, as into a theatre; the second (admit of) implies capability; as, "Both Houses declared they could admit of no treaty with the King."

Advent should be used only in connection with some important or sacred event, as "the advent of Christ." We do not say advent of a circus, but arrival (coming) of.

A few, few. The first expression is correct, for few is used collectively, like a hundred. But when we say, "A few soldiers deserted," we mean some appreciable number; that is, a number larger than is meant when we say, "Few soldiers deserted."

Aggravate is only used in a colloquial sense to mean exasperate, provoke, irritate, as of a person. Its proper use is in the sense of to make worse or more severe, as of a disease or evil. "To aggravate my woes." "To aggravate the disease." "To aggravate the horrors of the scene."

Ain't is used as a contraction for am not, are not and is not, but only in colloquial or illiterate speech. Neither grammar nor elegance supports its use.

All of. The of is superfluous. "I paid all my debts;" not all of my debts. "I saw all the sights;" not all of the sights.

Allow. In certain localities allow is warped into such uses (all inadmissible) as, "he allowed (thought) he was right;" "he allowed (intended) to pay it;" "he allowed (said) you were wrong."

Allude means to refer to something indirectly or by suggestion. It should, therefore, be carefully distinguished from the meaning implied by mention or speak of.

Always, ever. The former is preferable in prose, the latter in poetry; as, "He always rides a black horse." "He shall ever love."

Amid, amidst. These words mean the same and are used indiscriminately, the latter being preferred in poetry.

Among one another is awkward and inexact. "They fought among one another" should read "They fought among themselves," or "with each other."

Another from. "John is another style of man from James." Here from should be than.

Any manner of means. Omit the superfluous central words, and say, "Not by any means."

Are'nt is a familiar contraction for are not, when the subject immediately follows; as, "are'nt you going?" "Are'nt they thirsty?"

Article. The definite article should be placed before a present participle used as a noun; as, "The killing of John was murder." It should precede each of two subjects connected by and, when said subjects represent different persons or things. If we say "the doctor and minister called," the meaning might be that the doctor and minister were the same person. If we say, "the doctor and the minister called, they were clearly different persons.

At, in. When a simple point, as of arrival, is meant, use at; when a larger sphere is meant use in; when residence is implied use in. "He arrived at Washington." "He arrived in America." "He lives in Washington." Beware of that superfluous use of at, common in such expressions as, "Where am I at?" "Where is it at?" "Where am I?" and "Where is it?" are enough.

Avocation. Distinguish between avocation and vocation. The latter is one's regular pursuit or calling; the former is that which calls one away from his regular pursuit. But this distinction seems to be obliterated when the words are used in the plural.

Awful, awfully. Slangy and inexcusable expressions for very or exceedingly.

Aye. Pronounce it as I when you mean yea or yes; pronounce it as A when you mean ever or always.

Back. Omit back in returned back. Returned is enough, since it includes back.

Backward, backwards. Used quite indiscriminately; but a good rule to adopt would be to use backward as an adjective and backwards as an adverb. "A backward girl;" "he fell backwards."

Bad should keep its place in the language as the opposite of good; as bad health, bad crop. Not a bad pain, bad wound, but a severe pain, dangerous wound.

Badly is a word much misapplied when used intensely in the sense of very, very much or greatly. "I wish to see you badly," should be "I wish to see you much, or very much."

Banister is a frequent conversational error for baluster or balustrade.

Be. Do not forget that the verb to be calls for the same case after it as before it. "It is me," "it is him," "it is her," should be "it is I," "it is he," "it is she."

Beastly. Do not affect the distorted English use of this word, as in "beastly cold," "beastly hot," "beastly sick," etc.

Because why. The why is sufficient.

Beginner. The phrase "A new beginner" is in frequent use. No call here for new. It is implied in beginner.

Beside, besides. Two words much abused in usage. "I sat beside him;" that is, by the side of him. "There were three besides him;" that is, in addition to him.

Better. Wrongly used for more; as in, "It is better than an hour since I saw him."

Big. Much abused when used in the sense of great. A big man may not be great. A great man may not be big.

Blame on. "I do not lay the blame upon you;" or, "I do not blame you for your faults." On would not be proper in either of the foregoing sentences.

Both, used as an adjective or pronoun, implies two; but as a conjunction it may have a more extended meaning; as in, "The flood destroyed all his stock—both horses, cattle and fowls."

Bring, carry. Bring means to convey (fetch) to a place where the speaker is or is to be. Carry means to convey or transport in any manner from one place to another.

By should be carefully distinguished from with, the former being proper before an agent or doer, the latter before an instrument or means. "John was struck by James." "John was struck with a brick."

Calculate. "I calculate to go" is often, but wrongly, used for "I intend to go." It is similarly misused for think, believe, suppose.

Caligraphy. Don't say beautiful or fine caligraphy, but beautiful or fine writing. Caligraphy means beautiful or fine writing.

Clergy. A collective noun improperly used when individuals are meant. "Four clergymen graced the pulpit," not four clergy.

Compare. We compare one thing with another to find the points of agreement or difference. We compare one thing to another only when we know a resemblance exists.

Completion. The expression final completion is often heard. Omit final, for it is implied in completion.

Condign means deserved. He deserves condign punishment" should be "He deserves severe punishment."

Contemptibly. Distinguish carefully between contemptibly and contemptuously. To speak contemptibly is not necessarily to speak contemptuously.

Corporal. Distinguish between corporal and corporeal. Corporal means bodily as opposed to mental; corporeal means material as opposed to spiritual.

Damage. It is common to say "What is the damage?" when "What is the cost or expense?" is meant.

Demean signifies to behave or conduct (oneself). It should not, therefore, be used for degrade, debase or disgrace.

Depositary. Distinguish between depositary and depository. Depositary is the person with whom a thing is deposited; depository is the place where.

Differ from is preferable to differ with in all cases where the sense is "to be different from."

Directly. "Directly he fell he cried." Here "directly" is not a good substitute for "as soon as."

Discommode is fast going out of fashion, and is being substituted by incommode.

Disremember is no longer in literary use, though it still persists colloquially in certain sections.

Divers. Distinguish between divers and diverse. "Men of divers views" means men of sundry or various views. "Men of diverse views" means men of opposite or conflicting views.

Don't. A common colloquial of do not. It should be distinguished from the contraction of does not, which is doesn't.

Each, every. Their use is that of a singular. "Each man is." "Every man is."

Effect. Distinguish it from affect. Effect is to actually bring something about. Affect is simply to exercise an influence on.

Elder, eldest. Are properly limited to persons, and even to members of the same family. Older and oldest may be said of either persons or things.

Elegant. A much-abused word. It refers to something exquisite or refined, as to dress. But we must not say "an elegant time," "an elegant tree," "an elegant ride."

Else must be left out of all such expressions as "There was no one else but him."

Emigrant. Distinguish between emigrant and immigrant both in meaning and spelling. An emigrant is one who goes out from a country; an immigrant is one who comes into a country.

Enthuse. A common expression, little removed from a vulgarism.

Epithet. This adjectival word is properly applied to any person or thing; as, "a just man;" "a verdant lawn." But the tendency is to lower it in meaning by applying it only in a vilifying or traducent sense.

Equally as. Do not say "equally as well," "equally as good." Leave out the as.

Equanimity. Do not say "equanimity of mind," but simply equanimity, because the word is composed of two Latin words which mean "evenness of mind."

Exodus. Not to be used in the sense of departure, unless the going out is by a number of people, as of the Israelites from Egypt.

Expect. Largely misused for think, believe, suppose.

Fault. At fault is said of one who blunders or mistakes. In fault means that one has done something blameworthy.

Fetch. If one says "fetch me the thing," he means "go and bring me the thing." There is no propriety in the expression "go and fetch."

First two. It is difficult to distinguish between the proper use of first two and two first. Take the group James, John, William, Samuel, Peter, Giles. In speaking of James and John simply as the heads of the group, we say, "The two first enlisted in the army." But in speaking of James and John in comparison or connection with Peter and Giles, the last of the group, we say, "The first two enlisted before the last two."

Firstly. Don't say firstly, secondly, thirdly, etc., but first, secondly, thirdly, etc.

Fix is a fearfully distorted word, and with seemingly little help for it. To fix the furniture or the books had better be to arrange, etc. To fix in the sense of to repair is in general use, even with the word up, as "to fix up." But fix up, that is to dress; or fix one, that is to do injury to one, should never be used.

For, to. Are redundant in such expressions as "It costs more than you think for." "Where are you going to?"

From. Distinguish between the use of from and of. One dies of a disease, but from the effects of a disease.

Got is useless in such expressions as "The horse has got four feet." Has is sufficient. But when a thing is actually acquired or gotten, then got becomes proper. "He has got (gotten, caught) the horse."

Have. Improperly inserted in such sentences as "Had I have known it." Leave it out.

Had ought. "Had ought to know" should be simply "ought to know." The verbs have and ought are never properly used together.

Hain't. A vulgar contraction for have not and haven't.

Handy is properly something upon which the hand can readily be laid. We do not say "The store is handy, but 'near by,' 'close at hand.'"

He, she, her, him. See be.

How. Wrongfully used for what, when one is asked to repeat what has not been understood.

However should not be used for but or notwithstanding.

If. Often improperly used for whether. "Go and see if John is sick," should be "Go and see whether John is sick."

Illy. Ill is already an adverb and there is no need of the final y.

In, into. Often confusedly used, but needlessly. In implies place, position; into, direction, destination. "The stone lies in the water; it was thrown into it."

Index, when pluralized as to mathematical signs, becomes indices; as to tables, indexes.

In so far as. So far as is all that is required.

Jewelry must not be said of individual gems, but of gems in stock or store. "She wore jewels." "He sells jewelry."

Kinder is frequently heard as a vulgar distortion of kind of.

Kind of should not be followed by a. For, "What kind of a horse is it?" say, "What kind of horse is it?" Kind of has an accepted local use in such expressions as, "I am kind of sleepy," for "I am somewhat (a little) sleepy."

Kinsman is more definite than relative, relation or connection, when the one spoken of is of the same blood as the speaker.

Lady. Not "a man and a lady," but "a man and a woman." Not "a man and his lady," but "a man and his wife."

Lay, lie. Should be carefully distinguished in all their parts. Lay—to put down—is transitive; lie—to rest—is intransitive.

Learn. Often confused with taught. "The teacher learned many scholars" should read, "The teacher taught many scholars." The scholars did the learning.

Lengthways had better be lengthwise. So of sideways and endways.

Like. Often used improperly for as. "Do as I do," not "Do like I do."

Lots. Often faultily used for a great many or much. "He has lots of money."

Love, like. A man loves what appeals to his affection, as his wife or child. He likes what pleases his taste, as pie, meat, etc.

Lovely. Much abused as applied indiscriminately to every agreeable object. It should be only in connection with things which stir the affections.

Merely. Do not use merely when simply is meant. "I was there merely (only) as a visitor." "It was simply impossible to do it."

Middling makes a weak and absurd adverb. Better use tolerably or fairly.

Mighty is often substituted for the milder word very, but not always with discretion. It is nonsense to say "mighty weak," "mighty small."

Need. The infinitive sign to is not required after need. "He need not to go," should be "He need not go."

Neither requires its correlative nor, just as either requires or. "Neither John nor James came."

Nice is overworked when used to express promiscuous quality. Avoid such expressions as "nice tree," "nice time," "nice rain," etc.

No how is a vulgar substitute for "in no way" or "by no means."

None, composed of no and one, has been treated as a singular, but its use as a plural is quite proper.

Nor, or. "He has no gold or silver." Here gold and silver are equivalents; that is, they are money. "He has no land nor morals." Here land and morals are not equivalents, and nor becomes proper.

Nothing like. Often mistakingly used for not nearly. "He was nothing like as tall as his brother," should be "He was not nearly as tall as his brother."

No use requires the preposition of before it. "It was no use to talk," should be "It was of no use to talk."

O, oh. O expresses appeal or desire; as, O Lord! O for a rest! Oh is simply an exclamation or expression of surprise; as, "Oh, the house is on fire!"

Of. "The love of God" leaves the exact meaning in doubt. Better make it clear by some other form of expression.

Of any. For "finest of any," say "finest of all," or "finer than any other."

Of, off. Distinguish between of and off. One is a preposition, the other an adverb.

Only. It is impossible to picture the shades of meanings imparted by the use of only. The rule is to put it as near to the word you wish it to affect as possible.

Onto, as a single word, is rapidly taking the place of on to, its separate parts, just as into long since took the place of in to.

People should be used only when a large number of persons is meant; as, "A crowd of people;" "Only three persons (not people) came to tea."

Per day. "John worked for so much per day, per month, per year." Substitute a for per.

Phenomenon. Distinguish carefully between phenomenon and its plural, phenomena.

Place is often wrongfully made to do the work of where. "I can't find it any place," should be "I can't find it anywhere."

Post. "He is well posted" is by no means as desirable as "He is well informed."

Preventative is not a good English word, yet it is frequently used for preventive, which is the real word.

Previous. "The previous year," but "previously to." Distinguish between the adjective and adverb.

Programme. Program is now the proper spelling.

Proposal. Distinguish carefully between proposal and proposition. "He rejected the proposal." "He demonstrated the proposition."

Propose. Often used incorrectly for intend or purpose. "I propose to go," should be "I intend (purpose) to go."

Providing. Often mistakingly used for provided. "I will go provided (not providing) I am well."

Quickly. Often used when soon is intended. To do a thing quickly is to do it with speed. To do a thing soon is to begin it without delay.

Raise. Distinguish between raise and rise. The former is transitive and requires an object, the latter is intransitive and requires no object. "I rise early." "I raise my head." Do not use raise in the sense of rear, as of children.

Rather. Say rather warm, not rather warmish. Rather is superfluous before adjectives ending in ish.

Reside. "Where does he live?" is better than "Where does he reside?" To reside implies a residence of some permanence or pretensions, but one may live anywhere.

Reverend. Use The before Reverend. As, "The Reverend (or Rev.) Mr. Buckley."

Saw, seen. "I seen him yesterday," should be "I saw him yesterday." Saw is the past tense of see; seen is the past participle.

Says I. Frequently but improperly used for said I.

Scarcely. Distinguish between scarcely and hardly. "He can hardly see." "It is scarcely an hour since I saw him."

Seldom or ever is an erroneous use of seldom if ever, or seldom or never.

Shall, will. Distinguish between shall and will. In the forms "I shall go," "thou wilt go," "he will go," futurity is implied. In the forms "I will go," "thou shalt go," "he shall go," determination is implied.

Sight. Improperly used for a great number or quantity. "A great number (not a sight) of people." "Much (not a sight of) gold."

Since, ago. "Not long since" implies a time but lately past. "Not long ago" implies past time in general.

Some. Often wrongly used for somewhat, as in "I am some tired."

Splendid. Its use should be limited to things implying splendor. It is out of place in "A splendid dinner," "A splendid rock," etc.

Stop. Often improperly used for stay. "I shall stop at Lancaster." "How long will you stay (not stop)?"

Such another. Wrongly used for another such.

Sure. Often wrongly used for its adverb surely; as in "He's going sure," for "He's surely going."

Take up. Do not say, "When does school take up?" but "When does school begin?"

That. Distinguish between who and that. Who refers only to persons, as "The man who." That refers to both persons and things, as "The man that," "The house that."

Transpire. Is a common but faulty use of occur or happen.

Unbeknown. Unknown is the proper word to use.

Upon. Often used for on. "He called upon me" should be "He called on me."

Venal. Distinguish between venal and venial. The former means corrupt, mercenary. The latter implies something that may be overlooked or pardoned, as "A venial fault."

Ways. "It is a long ways home," should be "It is a long way home."

Went. Often mistakingly used for gone, in connection with have. "I have went there," instead of "I have gone there."

Where. Never end a sentence beginning with where with the preposition to or at. It is wrong to say "Where has he gone to?" for "Where has he gone?" or, "Where was I at?" for "Where was I?"

Who. Often but improperly used for whom, as "Who do you wish?" for "Whom do you wish."

You and I. "You and I will take a walk" is correct; but "This will not do for you and I," should be "This will not do for you and me."

WORD ABBREVIATIONS.

In a rapid age the custom grows to cut short, or abbreviate, words both in writing and printing. The custom is often abused by sheer arbitrariness. Some words are abbreviated differently according to locality, others according to taste or, even, haste. The following list embraces those abbreviations and contractions of words about which there is pretty general agreement as to form.

THE SPELLINGS OF ENGLISH WORDS.

Not until the invention of printing did English spelling begin to assume the importance which was its due. It then, unfortunately for the language, fell largely into the hands of printers who consulted their own whims and tastes rather than those structural principles which underlie rational orthography. It was inevitable that incorrect and confused spelling should result. Says an eminent writer, "The spelling of the masterpieces of Elizabethan literature is a marvel of typographic incompetency and orthographic recklessness."

The folly of such conditions, seconded by the criticism which fell upon the printing class, led to reaction, and by the beginning of the eighteenth century printers themselves began to make concerted efforts toward more uniform spelling. They succeeded in setting up a few uniform spelling standards, but inasmuch as they knew little of the principles of adjusting spelling to pronunciation, their work was, in general, that upon the surface, "arbitrary, mechanical and unscientific." When English dictionaries began to come into vogue their makers accepted, to a very large extent, the spelling standards of the printers, and thus perpetuated the existing orthographic crudities and inconsistencies. Dr. Samuel Johnson, in his dictionary, published in 1755, projected a system of spelling which, he claimed, would help to fix the external form of the language, but his failure to fit his practise to his theory showed how hard a problem he had undertaken to solve. Many subsequent attempts have been made to reduce the spelling of words to a uniform system. The most frequent and strongest of these have been made by associations of learned men in both England and America. The modern dictionaries of both countries are ably seconding the work of the associations, and exercising a wholesome influence on uniformity and simplicity of spelling. Dr. Noah Webster's dictionary, published in 1828, was the first in America to exercise marked orthographic influence here. Subsequent editions of his work continued to improve his system, though with caution and conservatism. The rules for spelling certain classes of words as found below are, in great part, those found in the latest edition of the Webster, known as the International Dictionary.

SPELLING RULES.

RULE I.—At the end of words of one syllable, and immediately after a single vowel, the letters f and l are generally doubled; as in staff, cliff, puff; all, bell, call, hill, null. Important exceptions are clef, if, of, pal, nil, sol.

RULE II.—The letter s at the end of a word of one syllable, and immediately after a single vowel, is generally doubled; as in grass, press, hiss, moss, truss. Important exceptions are as, gas, yes, his, this, plus, thus, us. This rule does not apply when s is used to form the possessive case or plural of a noun, or the third person singular of a verb; as in spade's, bones, loves, has, was, etc.

RULE III.—In a few instances the consonants b, d, g, m, n, p, r, t and z follow RULE I and double the last consonant; as in ebb, odd, egg, Finn, bunn, parr, err, mitt, butt, buzz.

RULE IV.—A consonant at the end of a word, and immediately following a diphthong or double vowel, is seldom doubled; as in ail, peat, haul, door, maim. Guess looks like an exception, but the u is inserted merely to harden the g.

RULE V.—In words of a single syllable, ending in c (pronounced as k) after a vowel, the k is usually made to follow the c; as in black, fleck, knock, buck. Exceptions are talc, zinc, arc, disc, etc.

RULE VI.—Words of more than one syllable, ending in ic or iac (c sounded as k), are written without the k; as maniac, elegiac, zodiac, cubic, music, public. Derrick is an exception. But when in words of more than one syllable the c follows any other vowels than i and ia, the common ending is ck; as barrack, hammock, hillock, wedlock. Almanac, manioc, havoc, and a few others are exceptions.

RULE VII.—When one word is derived from another ending in c, by adding a termination ending in e, i or y, a k is made to follow the c, to prevent the sounding of c as s; as, colic, colicky; traffic, trafficker; physic, physicking.

RULE VIII.—When one word is derived from another ending in a consonant preceded by a vowel, the same being a monosyllable or word accented on the last syllable, the final consonant is doubled; as, clan, clan'nish; plan, plan'ning; bag, bag'gage; hot, hot'ter, hot'test; squat, squat'ter. Gas, gaseous is an exception. Other exceptions are found in derivatives in which the accent of the primitive word is thrown back a syllable; as, prefer', pref'erence; defer', def'erence.

RULE IX.—But when a diphthong precedes the final consonant of a word, or the accent falls on other than the last syllable, or the ending be in two different consonants, the final consonant is not doubled in derivatives formed by the addition of a termination beginning with a vowel; as, daub, daub'er; brief, brief'er; rev'el, rev'eler; trav'el, trav'eler; perform', performer. There are a few exceptions, like humbug, humbugged. The derivatives of kidnap are spelled with either a single or double p. There is much diversity of opinion and usage among lexicographers as to the spellings under RULE IX.

RULE X.—Derivatives from words ending in a double consonant, by adding one or more syllables, generally retain both consonants; as, ebb, ebbing; stiff, stiffness; skill, skillful; full, fullness. An exception is pontiff, pontificial. In words like ill, illy, one l is dropped out to save repeating it three times; when the termination is less, the three l's may be retained with the use of a hyphen; as, skill-less; or the hyphen and one l may be omitted; as, skilless.

RULE XI.—When derivatives are formed from words ending in e silent, the e is mostly retained if the termination begins with a consonant; as, pale, paleness; hate, hateful; move, movement. But when the e is preceded by a vowel other than itself it is often dropped from the derivative; as, due, duly; awe, awful. There are many exceptions to this rule; as, wholly, wisdom, judgment, etc.

RULE XII.—When words ending in e silent go to form derivatives beginning with a vowel, the e is generally omitted; as, bride, bridal; plume, plumage; force, forcible. But for reasons of pronunciation the e is retained in hoeing, shoeing, dyeing, peaceable, changeable, outrageous, saleable, and a list of like words. Many lexicographers dispute the second part of this rule and spell according to the first part.

RULE XIII.—When words ending in ie go to form derivatives ending in ing, the e is usually dropped and the i changed into y; as, die, dying; lie, lying; tie, tying.

RULE XIV.—Words ending in y preceded by a consonant form derivatives by changing the y into i, except when the part added begins with i or y; as, pity, pitiful; icy, iciest; mercy, merciless. But adjectives of one syllable are exceptions; as, dry, dryly; shy, shyness; sly, slyest; but dry, driest is common. when the derivative is formed by adding the termination ship, the y is generally retained; as, lady, ladyship; surety, suretyship.

RULE XV.—Derivatives formed by adding a termination to words ending in y preceded by a vowel generally retain the y; as, play, player; obey, obeying; buy, buying. Exceptions are: day, daily; lay, laid; pay, paid; say, said; stay, staid.

RULE XVI.—Derivatives formed by adding a syllable to words ending in a vowel sound generally retain the letters corresponding to that sound; as, agree, agreeable; weigh, weighing; echo, echoed.

RULE XVII.—Derivatives formed by prefixes to words ending in double consonants generally retain both consonants; as, tipstaff, foretell, fulfill, enroll. Until is an exception.

RULE XVIII.—Hyphenated compound words retain the letters of the simple words; as, stiff-necked, dull-eyed, brick-yard.

RULE XIX.—Analogy requires that the noun and verb which are pronounced alike should agree in spelling; as notice, noticed; poultice, poulticing; office, officer.

RULE XX.—Defense, expense, offense and pretense are better spelled with an s than a c, because the words from which they are derived contain an s, and s is used in all their derivatives; as, defensive, expensive, etc.

RULE XXI.—Words like centre, metre, theatre, etc., are now written by many authors center, meter, theater, etc. But acre, lucre, massacre, etc., retain the re in order to preserve the hard sound of the c.

RULE XXII.—There is a long list of words ending in ise or ize, as civilize, criticise or criticize, which admit of both spellings. It may be said that in England ise is most used, and in the United States, ize; though we still retain advertise, advise, apprise, arise, chastise, circumcise, comprise, compromise, criticise, demise, despise, devise, franchise, disguise, exercise, merchandise, revise, surmise, surprise, etc.

RULE XXIII.—The English termination our, as in honour, favour, etc., is now almost universally spelled or in the United States; as, honor, favor, labor, vigor.

RULE XXIV.—The old termination pede (pes, the foot) is now mostly written ped; as, biped, centiped, quadruped, etc. We have, however, centipede and velocipede.

COMPARATIVE VIEW OF DISPUTED SPELLINGS.

Here is given a comparative view of the most important spellings of miscellaneous words from the Standard, Century, Webster and Worcester dictionaries—the four leading ones of America. The English dictionaries; that is, those published in England, show an equal, if not greater diversity in spelling.

In the following list S stands for Standard, C for Century, W for Webster and Wr. for Worcester.

The first spelling of each of the words presented is always that preferred by the Standard dictionary. It will be found on examination to be also that upon which all the above dictionaries are most generally agreed, though many of them have taken the pains to give alternate spellings, in the order of their preferences.

The plain initials, S, C, W, or Wr indicate that the first spelling of the words presented is the one preferred. When either of the above initial letters is marked with a superior figure, as C^2 or W^2, or $Wr.^2$ or C^3, W^3, or $Wr.^3$, said superior figure means that the dictionary so designated prefers the spelling of the second or third word presented. Three as a superior figure seldom occurs. To illustrate, take the word:

distil, distill S. C. W^2. Wr.

This means that Webster prefers the second spelling here given, or distill, and that the Standard, Century and Worcester prefer the first spelling, or distil.

In many of the words here presented there is agreement as to preferential spelling among all of the above named American dictionaries. In such cases it must be understood that the second, or disputed, spelling is the one found either in the dictionaries of England, or in those of inferior authority in America.

SIMPLIFICATIONS IN SPELLING.

Class I.

The following simplified forms of spelling have been recommended by the Philological Society of London, The American Philological Association, The Modern Language Association of America, and the Orthographic Union. They are recognized in the columns of "A Standard Dictionary," in the lists at the end of "The Century Dictionary," and in the introduction to "Webster's International Dictionary." A considerable number of authors, editors and educators have agreed to use them. Class I embraces the words ending in ed, when ed has the sound of t. In such cases spell simply with a t, and if a double consonant or diphthong precedes, reduce it to a single consonant; as, exprest, not expresst.

The spellings recommended are in bold-faced type.

Class II.

The simplified forms of spellings found in Class II have been recommended by the same authorities as in Class I. This class embraces words ending in ide, ile, ine, ite, mme, tte and gue, in which ending the e is silent. The rule is to omit the e and preceding silent letters when the change will not suggest another quality (sound) for a preceding letter.

The spellings recommended are in bold-faced type.

IMPROVED SPELLINGS OF NAMES OF PLACES AND PEOPLES.

The United States Board on Geographic Names, to whom is referred all disputed spellings of names of places and peoples, and whose decisions are obligatory on the Post-Office and other departments of the Government, has recommended the spellings found below. They do not exhaust the list, but are given as examples. It may be said that the Royal Geographical Society, of London, has made quite the same recommendations, and that they have been largely or wholly adopted in "The Century Cyclopedia of Names" and by "A Standard Dictionary."

The spellings recommended are in bold-faced type.

THE REFORMED SPELLING CAMPAIGN.

Early Stages.—At every stage in the history of the English language its spellings have engaged the attention, with more or less earnestness, of its grammarians, lexicographers, writers and instructors. During the formative periods of the language much might have been accomplished in shaping, simplifying and rendering uniform its spellings, had it been possible for all "masters of speech" to have come together in periodical conventions, or to have otherwise coöperated, for the establishment of spelling rules. This not having been possible, the always existing interest in spelling never became coherent, with the result that words assumed spellings after very arbitrary and, sometimes, very absurd fashions. In time, these badly spelled words became so fixed in the language as to make a reformed, modernized, rational and purely phonetic spelling of them a difficult and slow task.

American Reform.—In England, during later years, learned men began to come more and more together on the need of spelling reform, and coöperative effort assumed the form of widely represented organizations, whose agency has proved far-reaching. In America, Benjamin Franklin first kindled the fire of reformed English speech by a proposition to exclude many useless letters from the alphabet and to make a dictionary with improved spellings. Noah Webster, in his dictionary, insisted upon like reforms and accomplished many, an instance of which was the expunging of the letter u from the spelling of labour (labor). Benn Pitman, author of the shorthand, or phonetic, system of writing, was an important factor in the spelling reform movement. But the real campaign for reformed spelling in America was begun in 1876, when leading scholars of America and England held an international convention at Philadelphia, as part of the ceremonies of the Centennial Exposition of that year, whose object was "the amendment of English orthography," The members of this convention organized the "Spelling Reform Association," and made Prof. Francis A. March, Senior, of Lafayette College, Pennsylvania, its permanent president. This association later connected itself with the "National Educational and American Philological Association," and the two coöperated in distributing periodicals and general literature in favor of reformed spelling. They naturally encountered much opposition, and were handicapped in their efforts by lack of means. But the fact that the combined associations counted among their members the leading scholars of the land soon became known, and reformed spelling began to be thought worthy of editorial, magazine, pamphlet, and even book, discussions, much to its encouragement, though not at all times favorable. As discussions went on, objections to the reform movement diminished in number and effect. It was gradually ascertained that the most formidable objections remaining to be met were those from printers and compositors, who were wedded to their old ways of spelling; publishers, who feared the effect of new spellings on their trade; the common people, with their prejudices against change. To make more than very slow progress against these seemed impossible, unless something should happen to give fresh impetus to the reform and enable it to maintain persistency. This happening came about through the agency of Andrew Carnegie, who created (1906) a fund to encourage spelling reform, the income from which is supposed to be the equivalent of $15,000 a year.

Simplified Spelling Board.—As a preliminary to and a result of the Carnegie gift, The Simplified Spelling Board was organized, with headquarters at No. 1 Madison Avenue, New York City. It is composed as follows:

Brander Matthews, professor in Columbia University, chairman.

E. Benjamin Andrews, chancellor of the University of Nebraska.

O. C. Blackmer, publisher, Oak Park (Chicago), Ill.

David J. Brewer, justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University.

Andrew Carnegie, New York.

Samuel L. Clemens, New York.

Melvil Dewey, lately director of the New York State Library, Albany, N. Y.

Isaac K. Funk, editor and publisher of the Standard Dictionary.

Lyman J. Gage, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, New York.

Richard Watson Gilder, editor of the Century Magazine.

William T. Harris, Commissioner of Education, Washington, D. C.

George Hempl, professor in the University of Michigan.

Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Cambridge, Mass.

Henry Holt, publisher, New York.

William James, professor in Harvard University.

David Starr Jordan, president of the Leland Stanford University.

Thomas R. Lounsbury, professor in Yale University.

Francis A. March, professor in Lafayette College.

William W. Morrow, U. S. Circuit judge, San Francisco, Cal.

Homer H. Seerley, president of the State Normal School, Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Benjamin E. Smith, editor of the Century Dictionary, New York.

Charles E. Sprague, president of the Union Dime Savings Institution, New York.

Calvin Thomas, professor in Columbia University.

E. O. Vaile, Chicago, Ill.

William Hayes Ward, editor of the Independent, New York.

Robert S. Woodward, president of the Carnegie Institution.

Charles P. G. Scott, etymological editor of the Century Dictionary, New York, secretary.

First Step of the Board.—As one of the first steps of The Simplified Spelling Board it issued (March 21, 1906) a circular to the public, giving reasons for its existence and a brief outline of its purposes. These can be best presented here in the language of the Board, which reads:

"All whose mother-tongue is English believe that, if it is not unfairly handicapped, it will become the dominant and international language of the world. For this destiny it is fitted by its use as the medium of the widest commerce and the most progressive civilization, by its cosmopolitan vocabulary, and by its grammatical simplicity. No other existing speech, and none of the proposed artificial international languages, has the same adaptability to such a use. There is, however, a widespread and well-grounded conviction that in its progress toward this goal our language is handicapped by one thing, and one only—its intricate and disordered spelling, which makes it a puzzle to the stranger within our gates and a mystery to the stranger beyond the seas. English is easy, adaptable and capable of a many-sided development: its spelling is difficult and cumbersome.

"Apart from its relation to the foreigner, our intricate and disordered spelling also places a direct burden upon every native user of English. It wastes a large part of the time and effort given to the instruction of our children, keeping them, for example, from one to two years behind the school-children of Germany, and condemning many of them to alleged "illiteracy" all their days. Moreover, the printing, typewriting and handwriting of the useless letters which our spelling prescribes, and upon which its difficulty chiefly rests, waste every year millions of dollars, and time and effort worth millions more. If, then, as is certain, the reasonable and gradual simplification of our spelling will aid the spread of English, with the attendant advancement of commerce, of democratic ideals and of intellectual and political freedom; will economize the time of our school-children and make their work more efficient, and will aid greatly in the cheapening of printing, is it not a matter which appeals to common sense, to patriotism and to philanthropy?

"Some of those who would like to see our spelling made simpler fear that this will obscure the derivation of words; but all etymologists deny the statement and repudiate the argument. Etymology is history, and is now secure in innumerable books. Some object to any change, not realizing that change—much of it of the nature of simplification—has been almost continuous in the history of English spelling. We do not print Shakespeare's or Bacon's words as they were written; and surely, no great catastrophe to English literature or to the literary character of the language will have happened if our successors find—as they certainly will—as great or greater differences between their spelling and that of the present day. In familiar correspondence many simplified forms are now used which shock no one's nerves, and in the most emotional poetry forms such as dropt, stept, prest (Tennyson) are printed without attracting attention. So eminent a body as the National Educational Association, of many thousand members, has deliberately selected a number of simplified spellings to be used in its printed documents, and these spellings have been adopted by many periodicals and by hundreds of individuals. In fact, it is probable that if all English words were printed to-morrow in the simpler forms, which they unquestionably will bear a hundred years hence, it would take a very little while for us all to become accustomed to them.

"With the purpose of expediting this natural process of change, which has been going on for centuries, and, as far as may be possible, of guiding it in the direction of simplicity and economy, an organization, known as The Simplified Spelling Board (the members of which are named on a former page), has been formed, which will urge educated people everywhere to aid in the gradual simplification of English spelling, and thus help to make the English language more and more easy to acquire and to use. The liberality of Mr. Andrew Carnegie has supplied this Board with funds for its work, and plans for a campaign, which will extend over a number of years, have been formed.

"The recommendations of the Board will be announced from time to time, as its plans mature. In this preliminary circular it desires merely to ask those who sympathize with its aims to take a simple initial step. There is inclosed a list of three hundred of the commonest words (not the complete list, which amounts to thousands), of which different spellings are authorized by the leading dictionaries or by the usage of eminent men of letters, the simpler forms being printed in the first column and the more complex forms in the second. See these 300 words on following pages."

What Confuses Spellers.—The Simplified Spelling Board backed up its first circular by a review of the conditions prevailing in the spellings of the English language, especially those which lead to confusion. It says:

"The anomalies and perversities of English spelling are obvious enough and call loudly for regulation. But the very fact that some spellings are anomalous and perverse implies that the other spellings are more or less regular, and this is true. The majority of English words are spelled according to ascertainable analogies, and are thus fairly regular. This is especially true as to literary words of more than one syllable, of Latin or Greek origin. Thus, words like eminent, prominent, evident, protestant, memorial, terrestrial, practical, astronomical, familiar, peculiar, ability, conformity, monopoly, tedious, previous, biology, etc., are approximately phonetic as to the short vowels which are concerned in these words. They would not present many difficulties to the learner, if the learner were not confused by a host of other words with other analogies. It is true also of a great many monosyllables not ending in silent e, as bat, bet, bit, but, bad, bed, bid, bud, ban, bin, bun, cam, dam, slam, slap, slat, clash, clasp, self, help, strong, strength, etc., but here again a host of other monosyllables suggesting other analogies (plaid, saith, bread, been, flood, come, etc.) rush in to badger and confuse the unhappy learner."

Easy to Simplify Spelling.—With reference to the simplicity of the matter of reform spelling, and to the fact that many of the proposed reforms are but returns to old and well-established spellings the Board says:

"The rules and analogies which underlie English spelling can, however, be ascertained and stated, and the exceptions can then be clearly seen. The next thing is to reduce or abolish the exceptions. The process has worked well with many words. Why not continue it with other words? The matter is really very simple. When the rules and analogies are understood, any intelligent person can see for himself when a particular spelling deviates from them. Thus, any one can see that binn, bunn, butt, are out of accord with the rule established by the innumerable words like pin, pun, cut, that centre, metre, fibre, etc., are out of accord with the rule established by canter, number, timber, diameter, etc., and that favour, honour, etc., are out of accord with the rule established by error, terror, minor, major, editor, senator, etc. So likewise dript, dropt, snapt, drest, prest, etc., tho now actually less common than dripped, dropped, snapped, crossed, dressed, are more in accord with the prevailing analogy of p or s before a t sound, which appears in apt, host, boast, best, nest, rust, etc., and in the old spelling, still retained, of some preterits and participles, as crept, lost, swept, etc., as well as dreamt, leapt, etc. The common forms, dripped, dropped, dressed, pressed, etc., are in a great part alterations of seventeenth and eighteenth century spellings with t. The alterations were made to establish a visible but fallacious uniformity of inflection. Forms like dript, dropt, stept, stopt, crost, drest, kist, prest, etc., abound in the original editions of Shakespeare, Milton, Dryden, Pope, Burns, Scott, Byron, and are very common in more recent poets, as Tennyson, Landor, Swinburne, Lowell. They are always seen in those modern editions of the older standard writers in which the attempt is made to give a correct text. The habit of present publishers of permitting their proofreaders to 'adopt' some imperfect standard, like the older dictionaries, as an inflexible rule, and to alter the text of the standard authors, when a new edition is made, to suit his 'preference,' serves to conceal from the reader the real spelling of the author himself. Thus, not only Shakespeare and Milton, but Pope, Cowper, Byron, Scott, Campbell, Macaulay, are compelled to appear, not in their own spelling, but in the spelling of the publisher or proofreader who chances to 'prefer' the authority of some dictionary. This tends to suppress the truth, to stereotype bad forms as well as good, and to prevent that reasonable change toward order and simplicity which was allowed to work freely before the nineteenth century.

"Happily, however, there are many hundred words in which this process of stereotyping irregular or anomalous forms has not prevailed, and in which a choice still lies open between a simple or normal form, and a less simple or anomalous form.

"It has been thought wise to print a partial list of the words now spelled in two or more ways with a view of informing the public of the facts, and of ascertaining how far intelligent readers will concur in the effort to establish the simpler forms. A full list would contain many hundred words, many of them bookish or technical or semi-foreign."

Rules for Simplified Spelling. — In the preparation of its list of 300 common words for submission to the public, the Simplified Spelling Board purposely omitted from its larger list of more than 1,000 words certain large classes of words spelled in two or more ways, such as chemical words in -ide or -id, and -ine or -in, and the forms involving -ll or -l, or -tt or -t, before suffixes, as travelled or traveled, traveller or traveler, travelling or traveling, etc., rivetted or riveted, rivetter or riveter, rivetting or riveting, etc., in all of which the simpler form of spelling is, of course, to be preferred.

In its submitted list of 300 common words the Board distinguishes twenty classes of words, to each of which a simple and a definite spelling rule is applicable. With these rules as starting points anyone, even the youngest scholar in school or the least learned, can spell not only the 300 words of the list, but all analogous words, with the greatest ease and accuracy, and will feel that a happy escape has been made from mental hardship and confusion.

The twenty classes of words, arranged in the alphabetic order of the letters or affixes affected, together with the rules applicable to them, are as follows:—

1. Words spelled with ae, æ or e. Rule: Choose e. Ex.: Anesthetic, esthetic, medieval, etc.

2. Words spelled with -dge-ment or -dg-ment. Rule: Omit e. Ex.: Abridgment, acknowledgment, judgment, lodgment.

3. Words spelled with -ed or -t, the preceding single consonant being doubled before -ed (-pped, -ssed*) and left single before -t (-pt, -st). Rule: Choose -t in all cases. Ex.: Dipt, dript, dropt, stept, stopt, etc., blest, prest, distrest, mist, etc., blusht, husht, washt, etc.

*Forms like those found in class, or rule, three, being inflections, are commonly omitted from dictionary lists of words spelled in two ways, but they are genuine historical spellings and cannot be ignored. Some are very ancient. For instance, kist is A-S. cyste, mist is A-S. miste, and all are frequent and normal in English literature from Spenser, Shakespeare and Milton to Tennyson and Lowell.

How remarkable it all seems, that in our modern efforts to simplify English spelling we do, in such a vast number of instances, but go back to the forms employed by the greatest writers of former centuries. Milton, for example, has compast, languisht, vanquisht, admonisht, astonisht, diminisht, polisht, worshipt, supt, ccast, linkt, matcht, scorcht, etc.

To instance more in detail, the following spelling forms are used with frequency by the noted authors whose names follow them.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S ORDER.

In August, 1906, and after the adoption of the list of spellings recommended by the Board, by several educational boards in the larger cities of the country, and by a great many scholars and authors, President Roosevelt issued an order to the Public Printer at Washington to use the simplified form of spelling the 300 words in the Board's list in the printing of all executive documents. This order gave rise to much criticism on the part of those opposed to innovations in spelling. The President was charged with undue favoritism to what was erroneously called the "Carnegie idea," and to the efforts of The Simplified Spelling Board. To become a lexicographer and teacher, said his critics, was no part of executive duty, and to compel, by executive order, the adoption of reform spelling, even to such a limited extent as 300 words, in publications belonging to, and to be read by, the general public, was an arbitrary stretch of his power.

Extension of the President's Order.— Nothing disconcerted by criticism, rather because of it, and by further study of the merits of the simplified spelling system, the President, on August 28, 1906, extended his order regarding reformed spelling of the selected 300 words to all parts of the government, as represented through its executive heads. Thus the selected list became virtually the official dictionary of the executive staff, and the Public Printer set about the work of formulating rules for printing in accordance with the extended order.

The President Explains. — In a letter to the Public Printer, made public under date of September 2, 1906, President Roosevelt went at length into an explanation of his order and of the reasons which prompted it, by saying, in part, that most of the criticism of the proposed step toward simplified spelling had evidently been made in ignorance of what the step really is, no less than in entire ignorance of the very moderate and common-sense views as to the purposes to be achieved. He referred the Public Printer to the various circulars published by The Simplified Spelling Board, and recommended him to use them as answers to anyone asking for the reasons of his action.

No Attempt at Revolution. — The President continued his letter thus: "There is not the slightest intention to do anything revolutionary or to initiate any far-reaching policy. The purpose simply is for the government, instead of laying behind popular sentiment, to advance abreast of it, and, at the same time, abreast of the views of the ablest and most practical educators of our time, as well as of the most profound scholars of the stamp of Prof. Lounsbury and Prof. Skeat."

The Order Tentative. — In further explaining the nature of his order, the President said: "If the slight changes in the spelling of the 300 words proposed wholly or partially meet popular approval, then the changes will become permanent without any reference to what public officials or individual private citizens may feel; if they do not ultimately meet with popular approval they will be dropt, and that is all there is about it."

What the Changes Really Represent.— As to what the proposed changes really represent, the President continued: "They represent nothing in the world but a very slight extension of the unconscious movement which has made agricultural implement makers and farmers write 'plow,' instead of 'plough;' which has made most Americans write 'honor' without the somewhat absurd and superfluous 'u,' and which is even now making people write 'program,' instead of 'programme,' just as all people who speak English now write 'bat,' 'set,' 'dim,' 'sum' and 'fish,' instead of the Elizabethan 'batte,' 'sette,' 'dimme,' 'summe' and 'fysshe;' which makes us write 'public,' 'almanac,' 'era,' 'fantasy' and 'wagon,' instead of the 'publick,' 'almanack,' 'æra,' 'phantasy' and 'waggon' of our great-fathers."

No Attack on the Language. — Again, the President said: "It is not an attack on the language of Shakespeare and Milton, because it is, in some instances, a going-back to the forms they used, and in others merely the extension of changes which, as regards other words, have taken place since their time. It is not an attempt to do anything far-reaching or sudden, or violent, or, indeed, anything very great at all." In concluding, the President said: "My plan is merely an attempt to cast what slight weight can properly be cast on the side of the popular forces which are endeavoring to make English spelling a little less foolish and fantastic."

The Carnegie Motive. — Mr. Carnegie's motive for giving his money towards the simplification of the language grew out of his opinion that English is destined to become the world language, and that a primary and necessary step to this end is to free it of its difficult and contradictory spelling, thus relieving it of what is formidable, if not repellant, to those who would otherwise acquire and use it in commerce, diplomacy and literature. As expressive of his hopes, he says: "I hope that thoughtful persons will give this important matter due consideration and resolve to use at least two or three simplified words, and thus range themselves with us in the effort to carry on the unceasing work of improving our mother-tongue."

Professor March's Views. — The name of Prof. Francis A. March, Sr., pioneer of spelling reform in America, appears in the list of members of the Simplified Spelling Board, as seen on a former page, and he is the most venerable and learned of his many illustrious and earnest companions. In summing up his views of the simplified spelling situation, he says: "I may not live to see the accomplishment of spelling reform, but it is bound to come in the near future. People should find no objection to using words recommended by The Simplified Spelling Board. That will be the start. Then the people must be familiarized with reformed spelling by bringing before them reading matter using that kind of spelling. Print all sorts of good books in reformed spelling, and get people to read them, and the reform will be accomplished."

Prof. Max Muller's Views. — Prof. Max Muller was much in favor of the reformed method, and in writing of it, asked: "Can this old and unsystematic system of spelling English be allowd to go on forever? Is every English child to be mulcted in two or three years of his life in order to lern it? Ar the lower classes to go thru scool without lerning to read and write their own language intelligently? I do not think that such a state of things will be allowd to go on forever, particularly as a remedy is at hand. There is a motiv power behind these spelling reformers. It is the misery endured by millions of children at scools who might lern in one year what they now require four or five years to lern, and seldom succeed in lerning it at all."

Views of Prof. Brander Matthews.—In circular No. 4, of The Simplified Spelling Board, published May 7, 1906, Prof. Matthews, of Columbia University, speaks as follows:

"An accomplished historian of our noble language has asserted that English is now 'the most barbarously spelt of any cultivated tongue in Christendom. We are weltering in an orthographic chaos in which a multitude of signs are represented by the same sound and a multitude of sounds by the same sign.' And he then illustrates this confusion by drawing attention to the fact that one and the same sound is now represented by e in let, by ea in head, by ei in heifer, by eo in leopard, by ay in says, by ai in said, and by a in many. Here we have seven different symbols for a single vowel sound, and the most of these same symbols in other words represent other vowel sounds. Nor are the consonants very much more exact, as we see when we are reminded that one and the same sound is now represented by s in sure, by sh in ship, by sci in conscience, by ci in suspicion, by ce in ocean, by ti in notion, and by xi in anxious—again seven different symbols for a single sound.

"The spelling of English is now more foolish than that of German or French (both of which have been somewhat amended of late), partly because English has, unfortunately, suffered more than any of the other modern languages from the evil influence of uneducated printers and of half educated pedants. The printers were the first in the field, and their misdeeds are at once easier to understand and harder to counteract. The earliest printers in England were not Englishmen; mostly they were Germans or Dutchmen, to whom English was a foreign speech.

"Now it is possible for compositors to set type in a language of which they are wholly ignorant, but they probably would be less careful and make more blunders in setting up books in a language which they half knew. 'As foreigners they had little or no knowledge of the proper spelling of our tongue,' so Professor Lounsbury has recorded, adding that, 'in the general license that then prevailed, they could venture to disregard where they did not care to understand.' The result is that the spelling of the original editions of the masterpieces of Elizabethan literature is a marvel of typographic incompetency and of orthographic recklessness. Spelling was then less accurate; it was more clumsy and more slovenly than it had been when the multiplying of books was left in the hands of the better-trained copyists.

"So numerous were the variations in the spelling even of ordinary words that a reaction was bound to follow. Toward the end of the seventeenth century and in the earlier years of the eighteenth an effort was made to bring order out of chaos. Unfortunately this attempt toward uniformity was not guided by wisdom or by knowledge, but rather by chance and by caprice, since it was the work of the printers themselves, who knew nothing about the principles which should control the adjusting of spelling to pronunciation. A certain kind of uniformity was achieved in time by the acceptance of the standards set by the printers. This uniformity, from which our children are now suffering, was external, arbitrary, mechanical, and unscientific. In effecting it, so Professor Lounsbury has declared with characteristic plainness of speech, 'propriety was disregarded, etymology perverted, and every principle of orthography defied.'

"It was a grave misfortune that the mismade spelling thus casually manufactured was accepted by Bailey, and after him by Dr. Johnson, whose 'Dictionary,' published in the middle of the eighteenth century, gave it currency and authority, which his more ignorant disciple Walker only helped to extend and establish. And if the English language has today the worst spelling of any of the modern languages, this is due largely to the influence of Dr. Johnson, and to the weight of his ponderous personality. If he had only known just a little more about the history of his own language, and if he had exerted his dominating influence against the more obvious absurdities and inconsistencies foisted into our spelling by the narrow pedantry of arrogant proofreaders, secure in a perilous half-knowledge—in short if Dr. Johnson had not only known more about English, but had also cared more—our orthography would be less unsatisfactory to-day and it could be more easily set right.

"In his regard for Latin, and in his ignorance of English as it had been before the printers came, Johnson accepted comptroller, ignoring the older controller. He allowed sovereign and foreign (as tho they had something to do with the Latin regno) instead of the older soverain (Milton's sovran) and forrain. He countenanced debt and doubt, with the useless and disfiguring b, which was thrust in by earlier pedants. He kept a Latin p in receipt, tho he left it out of deceit. He spelt deign one way and disdain another. He was willing to leave a needless and misleading s in island, altho it had been iland in Shakespeare's time. He seems to have supposed that the older English agast would look more ghostlike if spelt aghast. He saw no harm in delight, altho the older form, representing more accurately both the sound and the origin, was delite. He cast out the Shakespearean ake for a labored ache. He kept up the accidental and perfectly useless distinction in the spelling of the final syllables of accede and exceed, of precede and proceed.

"The more clearly we see the full effect of Johnson's accidental influence in fixing upon our orthography all these infelicities and many others like them, the more we are moved to regret that the burly doctor undertook to prepare the dictionary of a language which he had not investigated historically, and in which he held it disgraceful to compose an epitaph. The arguments which Dr. Johnson advanced in his pamphlet on 'Taxation no tyranny' did not convert our forefathers then fighting for their freedom; and perhaps the time has now come when their descendants can decide for themselves whether they accept or reject the cumbersome spellings preserved in the dictionary made by the man George III pensioned.

"If only we had in our hands a satisfactory history of English orthography, we should find an easy answer to one protest frequently made against any proposed simplification of our spelling. This is to the effect that it is our duty to preserve for our children the orthography which was used by Addison and by Swift, by Milton and by Shakespeare, since the spelling that was good enough for these great masters of English literature ought surely to be good enough for us. But this protest is never voiced by any one who is familiar with the original editions of Milton and of Shakespeare; it is possible to those who are familiar only with the ordinary library editions set up in 'modern spelling'—that is to say, in the spelling arbitrarily agreed on in the printing offices of the eighteenth century, and ignorantly accepted by Dr. Johnson. This 'modern spelling' misrepresents the text of the masters of English literature. Altho it was accepted in most of the editions issued in the nineteenth century, it is now rejected by the severer scholarship of our own time, which insists on reproducing the original orthography.

"The multiplication of these more scholarly editions of the English classics will soon convince even the careless reader that English spelling has always been shifting, and that it was often simpler in the past than it is to-day. It will convince him that the so-called 'modern spelling' has no sanctity from use by the masters. It is not the spelling of Addison and Swift, of Milton and of Shakespeare; it is only the spelling of Samuel Johnson, author of the 'Vanity of human wishes.' It is the spelling of yesterday, but it is not the spelling of the day before yesterday, and it will not be the spelling of to-morrow. Many of the more cumbersome forms of the Johnsonian canon—governour, for example, and waggon and gaol—have long been abandoned here in the United States. Many more are likely to be given up in the immediate future. Already is rime making its way back into use, and probably sovran would seem strange now to no student of Milton. No lover of Tennyson finds anything unusual in stept and stopt, which the laureate liked better than stepped and stopped, perhaps as more frankly monosyllabic and therefore more harmoniously fitted into his verse; and perhaps because he followed the practise of the older poets of our tongue.

"It was the shrewd Bismarck who declared that 'we cannot hasten the course of time by setting our watches forward.' But the course of time is even steadier in its advance than the most trustworthy of our watches. Even in the nineteenth century there was some progress toward simplicity in our spelling, and now at the beginning of the twentieth century the time seems ripe for another step or two. The Simplified Spelling Board is profoundly convinced that the peoples who speak English are very conservative and very slow to move along the path of reformation, and therefore it is going to refrain from all radical suggestions. Its members agree with M. Brunetière that 'we can do what we desire only on condition that we do not desire what is not in our power.' "

Fate of the President's Order. Though the President's order of August, 1906, went into operation at once in the Public Printing Office, as to the spellings in executive documents, the judicial branch of the government refused to adopt the proposed new spellings in their papers and decisions, and insisted on a continuance of the old forms. When the Fifty-ninth Congress met in its second session, December 3d, 1906, it, also, was found in opposition to the improved spelling, and the House passed a unanimous resolution to the effect that the Public Printer should, in the printing of all reports, documents and other publications ordered by Congress, use the orthography found in accepted dictionaries; but this resolution was recalled when the President, seeing that his order was not generally acceptable to either the judicial or legislative departments of government, revoked it, as he had before intimated he would do in case it proved impracticable in its workings. It was made clear to him that the two forms of spelling in the same printing office resulted in confusion and expense. He, however, continued the reform spelling in the White House correspondence, except when the same was to pass through the Public Printing department.
